Our Bodies, Like an Engine,
Need the Right Fuel

We burn food material in our bodies, just as an engine burns fuel. And we all know that an engine to do its best work, must have the right kind of fuel.

Butter is one of the best body fuels. Butterfats are more easily digested than other fats. And in addition to its wholesome, palatable fats, butter is rich in Vitamin A, so necessary for growth of the child and strength of the adult.

EDITORIAL
Which is tough, as Joe says when he bites into a steak, but you can't expect a hen to lay when she is kept busy trying to keep warm. A chicken house properly insulated will keep hens cackling all winter.
A. E. Benschel is planning on building a new cackleberry factory.
We were in favor of awarding the world's hard luck championship to the man who contracted sleeping sickness, but was so troubled with insomnia that he couldn't sleep a wink. Then we heard of the fellow who had seasickness and lockjaw at the same time.
Luck like that will be good compared with the citizen who forgets to fill his coal bin with Tum-A-Lums before Ole Man Winter gets here.
A. P. Garner is remodeling his dairy barn.
If you like to raise flowers this is the time to put in a small cold frame and hot beds for keeping flowers thru the winter and for starting seeds.
We have the materials.

What we like about the modern apartment is that you can answer the door, kick the dog, open the window, look in the refrigerator and turn on the radio without getting out of your chair.
Tum-A-Lum does not recommend a house built with these conveniences. We believe in utilizing all waste space, yet giving plenty of room to turn around.
See us now for plans and figures. NOW is the time to BUUILD.
R. A. Brownson, Editor.
A. W. Prann has started building a chicken house 24x120 feet. This will be up to date and constructed in the best possible manner.
The farmer sat in his house and moaned at the so called Business depression. The reason it was plain to see His hens were on Vacations.

WE SELL QUALITY GOODS AT THE RIGHT PRICE AND GIVE YOU THE SERVICE.
