A Killer of Dogs.

The person who would poison or shoot a defenseless dog who is the property of someone else, is no better, in our estimation, than the reptile that crawls on the ground.

If the dog becomes a nuisance by chasing chickens or sheep and the owner is notified, there are not many men who would not see that the dog is kept up. It is only doing the human thing and giving the dumb animal a square deal.

Someone in the vicinity of Hermiston has been shooting dogs with a shotgun; and not even being decent enough to kill them outright, but just wounding them beyond recovery and leave them to suffer until they are found and sent on to the happy hunting ground. Whoever this person is, he is taking the lives of friends dear to their masters. A dog becomes very close to its owner in the years of companionship and is missed as one of the family when taken away.
