TURKEY MEN MAKE EXCHANGE OF IDEAS

J. Jendrzewski, the largest turkey grower on the project, has a flock of 1300 matured turkeys which are among the heaviest of any inspected during the day. The birds in this flock were the first hatched on the project which accounts for their advanced weight.

Mr. Jendrzewski has three brooder houses; one with two compartments, and each for birds of different ages. The coal stove and hover is in the center of the house.

After the group gathered for the picnic dinner they were addressed by Mr. McKinley Huntington, well known turkey grower in the state, and with the Western Turkey Growers' association, who urged growers to continue raising the standard grade of birds shipped from this section over last year. He commended the association here for its splendid cooperation given in the past and promised that better service could be expected from their association this season. He also stated that the association is in a position to know that the marketing outlook for the coming season is good.

County Agent Holt said that it was evident that much benefit would be derived from such enterprises as had been held that day and growers gleaned much information when comparing notes.

All Items Appearing in this Column are Contributed by the Hermiston W. C. T. U. Is Prohibition Corrupting and Debauching Young People?

Opponents of prohibition are often positive in their assertions that young folks drink more now than formerly. Yet seldom are they equipped with facts which qualify them to know.

Instead they are guided by hearsay and impressions. Where can one logically look for the facts? Not among the young folks of today—for they were too young before prohibition to have any knowledge of conditions as they existed then.

Not among the public at large—for their contact with young folks other than their own children, is generally speaking, superficial and not sufficiently widespread to permit the forming of sound opinions. To whom, then, can we turn for the real facts in the case? The answer is fairly obvious.

Men and women who have chosen for their life work, an occupation that brings them into daily intimate contact not with one or two young folks but with large numbers of them; men and women who during vital formative periods in the lives of young men and young women actually spend more time with these young people than do their own parents—the educators of America to find the answer. Here are some typical opinions based on long observations and experience.

President Wilbur of Leland Stanford University in California has this to say: "Compared with the period before the present laws were put into effect, I should say that we have only one-tenth of the problems we had at that time in connection with liquor."

Professor Clarke of the Disciplinary Committee at Yale University says: "In the old days our committee was constantly busy with cases involving intoxication and the disorders originating from it. Now we have practically no business of the kind at all to transact. This is in spite of the fact that in the old days we rarely troubled ourselves about a case of mere intoxication if it had not resulted in some kind of public disorder, whereas now, intoxication of itself is regarded as calling for the severest penalty."

High school principals throughout the county, responding to a survey made by the National Educational association, state overwhelmingly that drinking among high school students has decreased since prohibition.

College coaches representing nearly one-hundred leading colleges and universities were questioned recently about liquor and college athletics. They stated emphatically that drinking by college athletes is no problem. Ralph Young, track coach at Michigan state college, giving a typical reply, said, "We have no trouble so far as liquor is concerned in the past seven years during which I have been coach at Michigan State. In fact the liquor problem is negligible in our school, where we have 2000 boys out of a total of 3000 students."

Coach A. A. Spurg of the University of Chicago says, "The liquor problem is less of a problem here today than it ever has been in the past."

Witness the following excerpt from a speech made in Ohio in 1912 before the Retail Liquor Dealers' association: "We must create the appetite for liquor—the open field for the creation of appetite is among the boys. Nickels expended in treats to boys now, will return dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed."

(Article 7 Next Week) The next meeting of the W.C.T.U. will be Thursday, August 27, in the Library. The women of Hermiston are invited to attend. Our membership has doubled since organization. There is something of interest to all in our meetings.
