"WILD AND WOOLLY" FUNSTERS TRY TO IMPRESS TENDERFEET

In the picture featuring Jack Oakie in "Dude Ranch" Stuart Erwin, owner of the dude ranch in the Rockies, finds that business is falling off.

One by one his guests are leaving. They came out to his place from the East to see cowboys and Indians, scalping and shootings—but nary a bit of this "wild and woolly" business have they witnessed. They have found the much-touted "bad man" country as quiet as a clam.

Into this scene comes a traveling one-horse show—consisting of Jack Aakie, Eugene Pallette, Mitzie Green and Cecil Weston. They agree to provide the ranch with real Western characters in return for free meals.

This picture is coming to the Oasis theatre Sunday and Monday, Aug. 30 and 31, and you will want to know what the outcome of this predicament is.

FIGURES GIVEN ON TUBERCULOSIS INFECTION.

Portland, Ore., August 26—(Special.)—Further indications of the need for the protection of young children against infection with tuberculosis by their parents and others is given in figures released today by the Oregon Tuberculosis Association which show that during the past three biennial periods, 335 housewives and housekeepers have been treated for the disease at the state tuberculosis hospitals. School teachers numbered 17.

The employment of school and last three biennial reports of the state board of control, and show that in addition to the above, 93 farmers and 145 laborers received treatment at these institutions.

"But the 188 patients classified as students, most of them in their teens and under, have not been in all the highways and byways of life. They have chiefly at home, spending many hours in school as well. Their infection was, therefore, most likely received from active cases at home."

The employment of school and county nurse and physicians in sufficient number to give every school child a thorough physical examination at least once during the coming school year was urged upon school boards and county courts by the association as a means of maintaining the health of the entire state at a high level. "This is particularly necessary during times like the present when sickness becomes such a financial drain upon the family. Everyone knows that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure and this is particularly true where communicable diseases are concerned."

OPTIMISTIC OUTLOOK SEEN IN FARM MARKET ADVANCES.

Further improvement in the egg and poultry situation and signs of the turn toward better conditions in the dairy and sheep industries are seen in the annual summer outlook reports of the college extension service just issued.

Prices for eggs and chickens, although still low compared to recent years have made a strong seasonal advance during the past few weeks. Fewer hens are in prospect to go into laying houses this fall, and demand is expected to increase as business conditions improve.

As to the dairy industry, the report says, "The outlook appears to be on the side of moderate improvement." Some increase in demand is expected, but production is likely to continue relatively heavy for some time. Figures are given showing that dairymen have been saving fewer heifer calves and that the rapid increase in the number of milk cows on farms has probably been checked.

Record marketings of sheep and lamb are being made this year and conditions indicate that sheep numbers will be further reduced in this country and abroad. Demand is expected to increase as business conditions improve. The report points out that world-wide conditions of supply and demand affect wool prices in this country and consequently have a bearing on the sheep and wool outlook in Oregon. North America has but 8 per cent of the world's sheep.

LOCAL PAPERS AID FARMER IN AGRICULTURAL CAMPAIGNS.

News stories, particularly in local papers, are considered the most important single factor in putting over a campaign for agricultural betterment, according to Reuben Brigham, editor of the extension service of the United States department of agriculture, who was one of the principal speakers at the recent national convention of the American Association of Agricultural College editors held at Oregon State college.

In reviewing more than 10 methods used in state and federal cooperation in such campaigns as those for control of the corn borer in the middle west and wheat acreage adjustment, Mr. Brigham said that depend more on news stories than on any other single factor.

Agricultural editors from many parts of the United States attended the session and exchanged ideas on the best methods of preparing experiment station and extension service findings for the press of the country. These men are also in charge of editing bulletins put out by the colleges.

"You men who prepare agricultural information in popular form for the public are in no wise publicity agents in the malodorous sense of that term," declared M. S. Eisenhower, head of the informational service of the U. S. department of agriculture. "No other institution anywhere play so vital and effective a role in adult education as the state agricultural colleges and the U. S. department of agriculture. From the beginning, Congress placed informational work on a par with research and directed that informa-

Come and see—A "mystery ship," and a U-boat—an officer and a spy—a man and a woman—come to grips in THE SEAS BENEATH.

Can This be True? No time for love, but who can control the fierce fires of the heart even in the hour of bursting shells and storm-wracked ships? — "Step right up, ladies and gentlemen—and for the one price of admission, meet the finest submarine in the world!" You'll never regret it.

SUNDAY AND MONDAY Panics Show-Goes In All-Laughing Comedy-Riot!

The laugh of the town!

"Dude Ranch"

With Jack Oakie, Stuart Edwin, Eugene Pallette, Mitzie Green and June Collyer.

Question—Just what IS this thing called "dude ranch"?

Answer — A strictly American pastime, "dude ranch"-ing, is brought delectably to the screen in "Dude Ranch," the main offering at the Oasis.—A chance for the year's Biggest Laugh.

A girl, a boy, a horse, a flivver — what funny situation can you evolve from them?

There's plenty of action popping and fun bursting in "Dude Ranch," when these elements are brought together.

Come! Everyone! Bring your friends.
