JANET GAYNOR AND WARNER BAXTER IN "DADDY LONG LEGS"

Janet Gaynor, sported more winsome and appealing than she has been since the days of "Seventh Heaven" and "Street Angel," is coming to the Oasis theatre in her latest starring effort, "Daddy Long Legs." This photoplay, reputed to be one of the most attractive of all those released by Hollywood producers in recent months, combines pathos with humor and romance and is suited to every member of the family.

"Daddy Long Legs" is taken from the play of the same name which exerted an enormous appeal upon American audiences of a few years ago when Ruth Chatterton made her first onslaught upon American hearts.

TASTY FOODS FOR WINTER MADE FROM OREGON PRUNES.

Oregon prunes, both the big tart italians and the smaller, sweeter Petites, are now available in abundance and at very low prices. They are wholesome, nutritious and economical food and deserve a prominent place in the diet of the average family, says the school of home economics at Oregon State college.

The greater part of the Oregon prune crop will be dried commercially, of course, but another large part will go into family fruit closets in the form of jams, jellies, conserves and canned fruit. Prunes are one of the easiest fruits to can, and when properly done, one of the best. Canning specialists at the college recommend the following method:

Canned Prunes: Use Italian prunes that are thoroughly ripe. The stones may be left in or removed as desired. Pack the jars with prunes and fill with syrup, made with 4 cups of sugar and 6 cups of water. Process the jars in boiling water for 30 minutes.

Petites and other sweet varieties of prunes are also good canned if some fruit acid, such as a slice of lemon or a little lemon juice is added to each jar.

Of all the dainties on the preserve shelf, perhaps none is more delicious than prune conserve. This is simply made as follows:

Prune Conserve: Combine 2 pounds of halved Italian prunes with the grated rind of 1 orange and the juice of 3. Measure, and heat slowly to the boiling point, then add two-thirds of its measure of sugar and cook 45 minutes. Add 2 cups of shredded walnuts and cook to the jelly test—10 or 15 minutes. Pour it into sterilized glasses, cool, and cover with paraffine.

Other recipes for canning and preserving Oregon prunes, for using them in pies, cakes, puddings and in various other ways may be obtained upon request from the school of home economics at Oregon State college.

BORDEAUX MIXTURE AUTUMN GENERAL CURE-ALL SPRAY.

A spray rig filled with bordeaux mixture 4-4-50 is about the handiest thing around an Oregon fruit farm this time of the year in preventing trouble next season, says H. P. Bars, plant pathologist of the Oregon Experiment station. Results of experiments at the station as well as experience of many growers show that bordeaux mixture is almost a general purpose spray for fall.

Probably of first importance right now is to get a coat of bordeaux on apple trees in every section of the state where apple trees anthracnose is present. During the dry summer this canker disease remains dormant, but just as soon as the fall rains start it becomes active and spreads to twigs and causes certain fruit rots unless the trees are protected with a spray. Thorough covering with well made bordeaux will give practically complete control.

Next the peach trees can take a good dose of the bordeaux while the spray machine is warmed up. Peach blight and die-back are just ready to start their fall and winter attacks upon the twigs and buds of peach trees, and early fall rains aid this disease greatly in its campaign against next year's crop. A good dose of bordeaux now will prevent the sinking feeling from failure of leaves and blossoms to appear where they should next spring.

Finally, before the spray pump is put away, a trip through the berry patch with it will prove profitable if the logans or other cane fruits have been troubled with leaf or cane spot. This group of diseases is commonly called anthracnose, but Professor Bars says it is not the real anthracnose but works the same way and is controlled in the same manner, so good covering of bordeaux on the new leaves and canes will do the trick there as well.

Home-made bordeaux mixture is just as good as the commercial sorts if it is made properly, but that if it is important. County agents will give instructions, or directions may be obtained from Experiment station bulletin No. 259, "Sprays, Their Preparation and Use."

MCMINNVILLE—A 14-acre field of irrigated ladino clover on the Glen Martin farm has carried 34 head of cows and young stock since April 2, and is now producing so abundantly that one-third of the field is being left for seed, according to S. T. White, county agent, who visited the project recently. The field has received two applications of water this year.

Competition in Fat Stock To Be Keen

Beautifully fitted Aberdeen Angus heifer "Queen of All", Grand Champion in Fat Stock Division of 1930 Pacific International. Owned and fitted by Montana State Agricultural College, Bozeman.

The "Grand Championship" is the most eagerly sought award by livestock breeders everywhere. Particularly do our agricultural colleges treasure purple ribbons secured in competition. No wonder, therefore, that the entire population of Montana was jubilant when, last year, "Queen of All" secured the premier award in its class the first time the State College participated in this particular event. Will Montana repeat? Other breeders and colleges of the Pacific slope country are serving notice right now that "Montana" will have to "go some" if it expects to retain its laurels at the forthcoming 21st Annual Pacific International Livestock Exposition, Portland, Oregon, October 24-31.

Pacific International, with its twelve complete shows housed under one immense roof elevates in extent, is in reality a great educational institution devoted to the upbuilding of agriculture and its cornerstone—livestock. Here each year are exhibited millions of dollars worth of America's outstanding examples in the better breeding and better feeding of Beef and Dairy Cattle, Heavy Draft Horses, Sheep, Hogs, Goats, Poultry, Rabbits and Pet Stock. Prized ribbons and cash awards totaling $100,000 insure the keenest competition in all classes.

Here also are to be found Dairy and Land Products Shows; Wool and Mohair Show; Industrial Exhibits; Boys' and Girls' Club Work Exhibits; Wild Life Exhibit by Oregon Fish and Game Commission; "Truth-in-Meat" Exhibit; and one of America's most spectacular Horse Shows—featuring the best for the first time, matinee performances every afternoon.

Reduced round-trip fares are announced by all leading transportation lines to the Pacific International at Portland, October 24-31.
