JACKIE SEARL IS NO "SISSY" IN REAL LIFE

Jackie Searl, who plays "tattle tales" in motion pictures, may have to take a lot of punishment at the hands of other children, but they take plenty from him.

Jackie doesn't like to be set upon by a gang of kids or by Mitzie Green especially when it means a real physical discomfort for him. He has become adept at the art of punishing the punishers.

In Paramount's "Forbidden Adventure," he is set upon by twenty-five boys his own age.

This picture appears at the Oasis theatre Friday and Saturday. Jackie decided that the others were too rough so he fought back with subtle weapons that the camera didn't photograph, his elbows, shoulders and feet.

The boys who were unduly rough were pummeled by Jackie, who is much huskier and stronger than he looks. He asserts he can lick any kid in the world his own age and it's an affront to his pride to have to take it on the chin so often in motion pictures.

For this reason, Jackie didn't like his roles as Sidney in "Tom Sawyer," and "Skippy," as much as he does his part in "Forbidden Adventure." He is fighting back now.

EXCITING '70s BACKGROUND MCLAGLEN ROMANCE

In the Fox Movietone production of "Not Exactly Gentlemen," featuring Victor McLaglen with Fay Wray as leading lady and directed by Benjamin Stollé, showing Sunday and Monday at the Oasis theatre, there is embodied in gay romance, one of the most colossal races in American history.

A dramatic masterpiece woven around one of the most momentous periods in the development of the United States, the land rush when the Dakotas were thrown open by the United States government to homesteaders, this particular scene is truly epochal.

The actors in the great drama were men, women and children of every type and condition of life, from all parts of America and the flung corners of the earth. Hardy pioneers seeking new land to conquer and bend to their will; sedentary city dwellers seeking to satisfy the inherent craving to living by the sweat of their labor on the fruits of the earth; traders and merchants; printers and doctors; and even men of the cloth.

Those hardy souls, bred in fortitude and inspired by a Godlike spirit and courage were the ones who struggled beyond the far horizon to the fertile lands—and home.

Weaving in and out of the story is a most unique romance and the exploits of the three bad soubres, with a price on their heads, played by McLaglen, Lew Cody and Eddie Gribbon.

CLOVER SEED SUPPLIES AND PRICES BOTH DOWN.

Despite a substantial reduction in domestic production and a somewhat reduced carryover, farmers are being offered sharply lower prices for clover seed than last year, says a report just released by the Oregon agricultural extension service.

The production of red clover seed in the United States is expected to be about three-fourths as much as in 1930, or less than one-half of the 1929 production, says the report which is based on government estimates. The alsike crop is expected to be 10 to 20 percent smaller than last year's unusually large output.

Figures published in the report show that opening prices to growers are around $6.50 a hundred pounds lower for red clover seed than last year, and $6 lower for alsike. Several statistical tables were included giving the record of prices to producers, wholesale prices, production data, shipments for producing districts, imports and tariff rates.

DR. KERR ASKS SUPPORT FOR OREGON FROM O.S.C. STAFF

OREGON STATE COLLEGE, Corvallis, Sept. 16—Pointing out that the people and industries of Oregon stand in greater need today than ever before of the services that can be rendered by the institution, Dr. W. J. Kerr, president of Oregon State college, in a vigorous opening address to the faculty, urged that no effort be spared to place every possible resource of the state college at the command of the people.

"This is no time to think of the budget decreases or to make them an excuse for decreased service," said President Kerr. "This is a time to show determination, courage and industry in using what we have for the best interests of the state."

Dr. Kerr also stressed the immense sacrifices that many parents will make this year to send their sons and daughters to college, and insisted that faculty members do their part by helping the students to keep down their expenses and get the utmost out of the time spent on the campus.

Another point emphasized by the president was the importance of using Oregon products whenever it is at all possible, for demonstration work, for institutional use and for all other purposes. Oregon supports the college, he said, and the institution must support Oregon.

"Responsibility makes and adversity tests a man or an institution," Dr. Kerr said. "Ours is a 'heads-up' policy. We must progress and not merely get along, meeting every situation with enthusiasm."
