ing whatever he chose of Moore's invention when he got out his own machine in 1834, and who, it is alleged, spent $40,000 to defeat Moore's bill in Congress for the renewal of his patent rights.

"Moore later went to Rochester, N. Y., and there contracted with a Mr. Hall, proprietor of a large machine works, to construct two complete harvesters. Hall's pattern maker later went to Cincinnati, and there, it is alleged, fell in with McCormick and with him perfected the McCormick mowing machine.

"Just how many machines Moore built, and where, it is difficult to determine, but at least three machines were made in Rochester, N. Y. one for Senator Lyon, who later put it into operation at Prairie Ronde, shipping it from Rochester to St. Joseph on the brig Virginia.

Taken to California.

"Size of the machine, and advent of small reapers which incorporated many of the features perfected but not adequately patented by Moore, effectually ended hope of using the Moore harvester outside of the dry regions of the West. Several Moore machines were taken to California for use there, but by 1853 Moore had given up hope of securing a renewal on his patent.

"He was elected to the Michigan legislature in 1849, and in 1853 he moved to Green Lake County, Wis., where he spent the remainder of his life improving his lands and inventing various farm implements. He died May 5, 1875.

"Tomorrow, a city celebrating its first century of history, inaugurates that celebration by bestowing belated honors upon the community's earliest and outstanding inventive genius.

cold in winter and the boiling sun in the summer. They require no spraying whatever and are free from parasites. Once planted, always planted. If you try this planting scheme it might surprise you at the results within three years, and it may not cost you anything if you are a good rustler. The Birch tree does not grow from cuttings but the nurseries can supply them for you at a reasonable cost. They are increased by seeds, and propagated also by layers."

POULTRY INDUSTRY NOW HAS BEST COMPARATIVE PRICES

OREGON STATE COLLEGE, Corvallis, Nov. 17—Despite unusually heavy egg production per hen, government indexes show that the egg and poultry industry is in the most favorable position of any of the major farm enterprises, according to data given in the November report of the Oregon agricultural extension service on the farm situation.

The general level of prices for poultry products on October 15 was 110 per cent of the pre-war 5-year average, which was higher than any other group of farm commodities. Dairy products came second at 95 per cent of the pre-war. Meat animals were 79, fruits and vegetables 70 and grains 46. There have been some shifts in prices since mid-October, but the general relationship of values is probably still about the same.

Outlook reports last winter and spring indicating a reduction in the number of hens this fall and winter have proved correct. A survey of the situation made by the U.S. department of agriculture showed 5 per cent fewer laying hens on farms on November 1st than a year previous, although the average hen was laying 10 per cent more eggs than a year ago.

"Unusually mild weather in October and heavy feeding indicated by cheap grain and relatively favorable prices for eggs were important factors in the increased rate of laying, says the college report. The demand was not good enough to absorb the supplies at the level of prices prevailing early in October, and the market took a moderate downturn at a season of the year when prices are usually still going up.

"Cold storage holdings of case eggs November 1 were 5,740,000 cases, about 1,000,000 less than a year previous and slightly below average on that date, but the movement out of storage during October was below last year and less than average. On the Pacific coast, egg production is lighter than last year and storage stocks less.

"Supplies of poultry in storage totaled 65,690,000 pounds on November 1, somewhat more than a year previous and slightly above average.

BURNHAM'S

LANDSCAPE GARDENING IS ACCOMPLISHED BY PLANNING

country have an abundance of wild Elderberries planted in groups. Directly in front of this group of Elderberries, plant a group of Kerria (Japonica) leaving blank spaces between the groups of Elderberries and the group of Kerria (Japonica.) Say, for instance, two spaces, one for blue Delphinium and one for ornamental grasses. These two plants give the desired effect of tropical atmosphere which is so essential. In front of the Kerria plant small groups of different kinds of annuals that bloom freely all summer. Use your own judgment but don't plant anything that grows more than one foot high. On each side of the Sycamore, directly behind the Birch, start a row of trees each direction, not as you would plant a row of beans, but zig zag them. Plant any kind you may have but be sure and start off with a Lombardy Poplar or two. I don't recommend any other Poplar but I do think that there is none other in the list better than this tree to use to break the sky line in your background planting.

"Make your background as long as your yard is wide, or wider, and set them in a straight row such as the two black Locust have formed in front of the Birch. Plant a row of Spirea-VanHouttei full-width of your yard, directly in line with the row of black Locust. Go to your neighbors and get cuttings, they grow as easily as cuttings from a willow. The best results are obtained from fall plantings; November is best. Make your cuttings from eight to ten inches long and plant them deep enough to let but one inch stick out of the ground. Be sure to tramp the soil around the base of the cutting. Previous year's growth is the best, and also those that are not less than one-fourth of an inch in diameter.

"Everything that I have mentioned in this list is absolutely guaranteed to be hardy to withstand our
