WILL ROGERS AND SAUCY FIFI BOOKED FOR OASIS.

Only the works of America's greatest humorists are considered fit screen material for Will Rogers. His first talking screen effort was made from Homer Cory's rollicking story, "They Had to See Paris," "So This is London" was from the amusing play by Arthur Goodrich, Frank Bacon's immortal "Lightnin'" served Rogers for one of his most colorful characterizations, while Mark Twain's greatest laugh provoker, "A Connecticut Yankee," was chosen for the fourth smashing success of the greatest personality in pictures.

"Young As You Feel," next attraction at the Oasis theatre, is his fifth picture to be produced under his starring contract with Fox Films, and the second Rogers production to be directed by Frank Borzage.

"Young As You Feel" is the screen version of George Ade's stage play, "Father and the Boys."

Fifi Dorsay, the saucy little French girl who scored with Rogers in "They Had to See Paris," enacts the chief supporting role. Others in the brilliant cast include Lucien Littlefield, Donald Dillaway, Terence Ray, Lucile Browne and Rosalie Roy.
