of abnormal decay or break-down were apparent. This temperature is recommended for either storage or delayed ripening purposes.

At 60 to 70 degrees F. the rate of ripening was considerably increased. These temperatures are recommended for ripening but not for storage. For rapid ripening a temperature much higher than 70 degrees is not desirable because of the rapid rate of decay.

Firm, fully ripe tomatoes held up most satisfactorily at 55 degrees F. storage. Ripe tomatoes may be expected to keep in good condition at temperatures as low as 32 degrees for about 8 to 10 days, but when removed to a higher temperature, as would be necessary in getting commercial lots to the consumer, they soon break down.

Tests on a commercial lot of mature green tomatoes shipped from Florida and stored and ripened under conditions similar to those for the tomatoes grown at the Arlington experiment farm, show similar results.

Mature green tomatoes picked the evening before the first field frost ripen in storage more rapidly and develop less decay than those picked the morning following the frost.

BROADWAY SMASH BY PHILIP BARRY NOW ON SCREEN

"Tomorrow and Tomorrow," Philip Barry's play of courageous, unconventional wife to whom marriage is not sufficiently soul-satisfying, is the latest starring film vehicle for Ruth Chatterton, recently completed at Paramount's west coast studios.

This philosophical, yet clearly understandable emotional drama is the Oasis theatre's feature for two days beginning Sunday of this week.

The play, the latest by the author of more than ten recent Broadway successes, enjoyed a long run in New York and is now playing in numerous large cities throughout the nation.

It was hailed by critics as one of the best works of Barry, author of "Paris Bound" and "You and I."

Miss Chatterton's part as a woman whose heart is divided between her earthbound "eternal collegian" husband and a man who uncovers hidden romantic spots of her life is said by preview critics to be her most dramatic role since entering pictures.

Approximately one-fifth of the population of United States attends the movies every day.
