EARWIG PARASITES TO BE DISTRIBUTED IN OREGON.

Communities in Oregon troubled with earwigs may get a colony of the earwig parasites now being used effectively in Portland for release this spring. Through an arrangement made by the O.S.C. Extension service with the Portland Insectary, some 70 colonies of the parasites may be distributed through Oregon on a cost basis.

The Portland insectary is financed by the city and operated by entomologists of the experiment station who have developed highly efficient methods of multiplying the parasitic flies that prey on the earwigs. They do no harm whatever to any other insect, animal or plant. Communities interested in getting a start of these parasites may make definite arrangements through any county agent or deal directly with the extension service at the college.
