WITH FARMERS AROUND THE STATE

GRANTS PASS—Josephine county farmers are showing a marked interest in production of soy beans as an annual hay crop this year as a result of some remarkably high yields of beans obtained by farmers growing them during the past couple of years, reports Herb Howell, county agent. Yields on irrigated land in the Murphy district run as high as four tons to the acre, Mr. Howell says.

HILLSBORO—Many farmers of Washington county are making good use of cerosan in treating oats and barley for smut this year instead of the blue vitriol or formaldehyde treatment depended upon until recent years, according to County Agent W. F. Cyrus. Cerosan is used in dust or powdered form at the rate of about two ounces for each bushel of grain. This method eliminates much of the labor and time involved in the old methods of treating.

OREGON CITY—The ability of various pasture grasses to withstand winter weather has been well demonstrated in a grass nursery conducted by the agricultural committee of the George grange on the Linns farm at Estacada. Eleven grasses were sown in this nursery on a firm seed bed of Olympic silt loam on October 1, 1931. Of these Astoria bent grass, English rye grass, tall oat grass, timothy and tall fescue survived the winter, while orchard grass, Canada blue grass, chewing fescue, smooth brome grass, meadow fescue and red top froze out. New seedlings have been made this spring, according to County Agent J. J. Inskeep, who cooperates in the trials, and checks will be made on which grasses furnish the most pasture.

PLEASANT VALLEY—One of the 132 homemakers of Baker county who registered for the series of letters "Short Cuts in Kitchen Work," lists these changes she has made:

"I have papered the kitchen and put up fresh oilcloth behind the stove, over the sink, sink board and work table, and lined cupboard and table drawers with oilcloth. I improvised a rack to hold different sizes of knives as well as the potato masher, a spatula and my egg beater. This rack is over the sink board, just a step from the stove. Also, I have installed a small shelf above the sink for cleaners, soap, brushes and the like. I built in a corner closet for wraps and soiled linens, and gloves and overshoes and the ten thousand things it seems necessary to keep in the kitchen on this ranch." The series of letters were obtained through the extension service at O. S. C.

DALLAS—Applying rock phosphate, sometimes sold as Tri Calcium Phosphate, to crops, is like trying to grow plants on concrete pavement, Arthur King, soils specialist of the Oregon Extension service, advised Polk county farmers recently. While rock phosphate has a high chemical analysis, the plant food is not available. Farmers planning to apply this particular plant food would do best to use superphosphate, King says.
