BURNING OF RANGE HARMFUL PRACTICE, SAYS HYSLOP.

The idea that burning of forest ranges such as has been attributed to Indians in years gone by is beneficial to these ranges is scouted by G. R. Hyslop, chief in farm crops at Oregon State college, who is advocating a program of range pasture development through research designed to find the best plants for such use in Oregon and how best to establish them.

"In the old Indian days it was true that they could burn over land and there was the appearance of more fresh green grass because it began to show up as soon as it emerged from the soil," explains Professor Hyslop. "But they had plenty of room, as the entire Indian population probably did not exceed a million.

"Every burning that takes place destroys surface-crowned perennial grasses and legumes. Plants that survive are deep-rooted perennials, or annuals that have dropped seed that survives the fire. So we get vine maple, fern, poison oak and some of the bulbous plants and unpalatable lupines, and a lot of poor annuals like cheat and broncho grass."

Professor Hyslop believes Oregon might well encourage the effort to have a federal plant exploration party sent into Asia to hunt for dry-land grasses particularly suited to the dry ranges of eastern and southern Oregon. When the forage problem for these acres is solved it will also help solve weed, fire and erosion problems, he says.

"Forage research in Oregon has given us Grimm and Ladak alfalfa, Hungarian vetch, Austrian sweet field peas, stem-rot resistant sweet clover, crested wheat grass, the Bortfield turnip, Japanese millet, Schoolman oats, irrigated Ladino clover pastures and scores of other crop improvements," he points out. "No research problem that I know of has so great a future for the state than that looking to the rehabilitation of our great range area of more than 50 million acres. The development of this resource even in small part would simplify the livestock production problem and would establish values that do not now exist."

OTHER FOLKS' LIVES VIEWED IN FILM PLAY AT OASIS.

Family life—its joys and disappointments, its excitements, its human drama, its laughing hours—all here are presented with facile didactic touches and skilful artistic strength in "Husband's Holiday," the Paramount talkie featuring Clive Brook, Charlie Ruggles, Vivienne Osburn and Harry Bannister at the Oasis theatre Sunday and Monday.

A picture of families and for families, "Husband's Holiday," gets off to a quick start, and holds its pulsating tempo for more than an hour of gripping, enchanting entertainment.

Clive Brook is seen as the romantic-minded husband who yields to the charms of a beautiful young woman, Juliette Compton. With a last spark of fair-mindedness he tells his wife, Vivienne Osburn, about the affair. He suggests that they get a divorce.

Amazed and shocked, his wife is at her wits' end. But she has courage enough to tell Brook that he may expect no divorce-cooperation from her. She brands the affair as a passing fancy, too trivial a thing to wreck such a substantial institution as their marriage.

Later, Juliette meets Vivienne. The two women discuss their respective love for Brook. Juliette lies about her relations with him, and forces Vivienne to say she will grant the divorce.

"That evening when Vivienne tells Brook of her changed decision he is taken aback. He begins to suspect that she herself has someone new to love. This puts him into a mental torment.

At a party on the eve of the proposed wedding, Brook's distracted attitude brings Juliette to a realization that they can never make a go of marriage. She takes poison and nearly dies in a hospital.

To appease their children, Dickie Moore and Marilyn Knowlden, Brook spends Christmas with his family. To him and Vivienne the traditional joys of the season are a hollow mockery. Something must be done to terminate the affair with Juliette. Something must be done to revive Vivienne's old love for her husband.

The finale settles this dilemma in a truly joyful manner, and all ends happily for the family that had been so close to moral disaster.

HILLSBORO—Strawberry growers of Washington county are going ahead with plans for improvement of their business next year despite the present disastrous price season, reports County Agent W. T. Cyrus. Several growers are making plans to take advantage of the newly offered certification service for strawberry plant producers, or will follow methods suggested for developing disease free stock for their own use.

EUGENE—A demonstration to determine the value of superphosphate on Ladino clover pasture, carried out by H. J. Merz of Ada, shows that the fertilizer stimulated growth on poor spots but gave no material results where the soil was in good condition, says County Agent Fletcher who cooperated in the test.

CHURCH NOTES

METHODIST CHURCH. O. W. Payne, Pastor. Sunday will be one of those full days again. Sunday school at 10:00 o'clock and then at the regular church hour you will have the opportunity of hearing Mr. McAttee his impressions of conference on a lay delegate. Everybody is welcome and you will surely enjoy this service. Regular preaching in the evening.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES "God" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, July 3.

The Golden Text was, "I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me" (Ex. 20:2, 3).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? . . . Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord (Jer. 23:23, 24).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Paganism and agnosticism may define Deity as 'the great unknowable'; but Christian Science brings God much nearer to man, and makes Him better known as the All-in-all, forever near" (p. 599).
