Tales of Folks at the Hotels.
(From The Oregonian.)
There is altogether too much hay to suit H. J. Stillings, stockman of Hermiston, Or. He says that hay is should bring $10, and contends that only bringing $4 a ton when it $4 hay doesn't cover the cost of production. Mr. Stillings chaperoned some steers and hogs to the yards yesterday and then hurried up town to find a place to watch the parade. Ruddy-faced, stout Mr. Stillings was one of the Oregon delegates to the democratic national convention which nominated Governor Roosevelt. Although in Chicago a week, the rancher from Hermiston preferred to remain in the room of the Oregon delegation than wander around looking at the sights, and in the convention he displayed the most ornate suspenders of any of the 1154 delegates.

STANFIELD NEWS NOTES

NUT GROWERS TO VISIT OREGON AND WASHINGTON

The schedule for the annual summer field tour of the Western Nut Growers association August 31 and September 1 has just been announced, showing a trip arranged for two states for the first time this year. C. E. Schuster, secretary of the association and member of the experiment station staff at Oregon State college, has extended an invitation to all interested in nut growing to make the field trip whether members of the association or not.

The first day will be spent in Clark county, Washington, and will be devoted mainly to visits to filbert orchards. The second day the party will go to Marion county, Oregon, spending the day visiting walnut orchards principally, ending at Senator C. L. McNary's farm north of Salem.
