LEAVES ARE SOURCE OF EXCELLENT FERTILIZER.

What to do with the leaves and other plant refuse is usually a big problem in the fall. Dr. W. L. Powers, chief in soils at O. S. C., suggests that it be made into good artificial manure fertilizer that will be odorless and free from weed seed.

Such leaves and other refuse may be composted easily and if properly done will result in most excellent fertilizer just as high in nitrogen and organic matter as barnyard manure, says Dr. Powers.

The important factors in composting, he says, are to maintain a medium moisture content, add extra nitrogen, and add lime or ashes to prevent unfavorable acidity.

A board enclosure of any convenient size will hold such refuse in a neat, flat topped compost stack. To each ton of leaves or straw it is necessary to add about 50 pounds of ammonium sulfate or other nitrogen carrier, and a like amount of lime.

Hard wood ashes may be used instead of lime by using about three times the weight.

Conifer needles, tules, corn stalks and other coarse waste may also be converted into artificial manure but usually require inoculating with some barnyard manure and loam.

Filbert Blight Controlled.

McMINNVILLE - Complete control of filbert blight has been obtained by Fred Beagles as a result of following rigid precautions in cultivating and pruning, reports County Agent S. T. White. In pruning all tools were dipped in disinfectant after completing each tree to avoid spreading disease.

Five acres of crested wheat grass were harvested for seed this year on the Peterson farm near here. The stand was poor when first seeded but it has been spreading well since, and this year was left for seed. A good crop, under the circumstances, resulted.
