Christmas Enlightens.

In an old shack not far from here sits a man whose soul is overlaid with troubles, thoughts of yesterday and the future bear down on his soul heavier than any physical burden.

And then from within this being, now more beast than mortal, a voice is calling—calling the good and noble emotions of the race from their hiding place to come to the front, banishing shame, hunger, and all other forms of adversity.

For one day each year the creatures of this earth are allowed to throw aside the chains which bind one to the past and hold one for the future; for one day, each man is allowed to live for that day alone, not giving thought to the realities and hardships of the physical life.

And in that interval, in that which we have come to call eternity, goodness and kindness overcome all, while each man, with reverence for his Creator, adds his bit to the greatest and most beautiful of all earthly panoramas, Christmas.

Smiling faces, joyous voices—the heart overflows with ecstasy, and back comes the inner voices to our fellowman, who seems, but a moment ago, dead to the best of life, saying "peace on earth, good will to men—"

And so it is, and always shall be the one day set aside by all mankind; for God made man, but man makes Christmas.

IF you want something satisfying, Truly good, Just drop in our place and eat Our home cooked food.

TURKEY MARKET UNSETTLED; MILLIONS IN COLD STORAGE.

A decidedly unsettled condition characterized the Christmas turkey deal in its early stages, with the situation complicated by uncertain demand, fairly liberal supplies, and sharply increased cold storage holdings, according to a review issued by the extension service at Oregon State college based on a direct report from the department of agriculture at Washington D. C.

Early quotations were the lowest in many years as wholesale prices ranged around five to six cents below the month previous and as much as 13 cents under those of a year ago. Northwestern turkeys held an advantage in the large eastern markets over competing supplies, however, commanding a two-cent premium over Texas birds.

Actual volume of early turkey movements was reported fully as heavy as the year previous when the Christmas marketings were considered at least liberal if not heavy. Opinions differed, however, as to the probable volume of receipts at eastern markets and the strength of demand.

Some encouragement as to demand was seen in the fact that quantity is high this year, thus encouraging consumption to that extent. One source of competing supply is also nearly completely eliminated this year, in that importations have been practically stopped by the tariff of 10 cents per pound dressed weight which makes importations unprofitable at present prices.

December cold storage figures complicated the situation as they showed that in one month an abnormally low cold storage supply had been boosted by 11-million net pounds that moved into storage during November. This is a record gain for a single month, and the total of 12 million pounds is more than twice as large as average.

Wheat Grass Does Well.

FAKER—Crested Wheat grass continues to hold the spotlight among new forage crops in this county. W. R. Hawley obtained enough seed from a one-acre planting this year to seed an additional 10 to 15 acres, and the grass this fall started well again after the rains came. L. C. Hanson harvested part of a six-acre planting for seed getting 250 pounds. He has seeded 30 additional acres which has started well.
