WEEK'S FOOD LIST BOUGHT FOR $3.94, SAYS PUBLICATION.

Can a family of five—two adults and three children—buy every item of food for an adequate diet for a week for less than $4, here in Oregon in 1933?

Believe it or not, that is exactly what a new publication of the home economics extension service at Oregon State college says can be done. In fact it gives prices item-by-item or a week of menus that total at retail in Corvallis just $3.94, which is less than allowed by most standard relief agencies.

Not content with putting out a theoretical list of foods for a week, the publication, prepared largely by Lucy A. Case, extension nutrition specialist, contains actual menus for a entire month on this basis, with complete recipes for all the dishes listed in them.

While the menus and recipes were prepared primarily for use of relief committees through the state, they are gathered into bulletin form in the belief that many self-sustaining families faced with the necessity of drastically curtailing expenditures, will find them useful.

"A thrift program implies full value from any investment," say the authors. "In times of prosperity it may include spending for many pleasures, which, though unessential, add richness to living. In times of economic stress a thrift program consists of getting all essential values with little financial investment.

"This bulletin is to aid in maintaining a desirable standard of living with little expenditure of money out with a very substantial investment of the homemaker's time, ability, skill and interest."

This menu and recipe bulletin, which is free to Oregon citizens, is but one of a series of pamphlets and circulars published recently to help Oregon homemakers in saving safely. Others deal with economical school lunches, the use of powdered skim milk in the home, how to make American cheese at home, making homemade soap, and wild spring plants that are palatable as greens.
