BERRY CANNING SEASON BRINGS HINTS ON METHOD.

Raspberries and logans are the seasonable berries now ready for canning, and both lend themselves well to the cold pack method of canning, says Lucy A. Case, extension specialist in foods and nutrition at O.S.C. Those living on or near berry farms have the advantage of being able to can berries within a few hours after picking, or at least the same day, thus insuring best color and flavor. Here are some of the directions given by Miss Case for cold-pack canning:

Wash the berries lightly, if at all, in a colander. Place hot, sterilized jars in a dish pan of very hot water. Pour a few berries into the jar and shake them down by gently tapping the bottom of the jar against a wooden board. Place the jar in the hot water again, add more berries and shake them down, alternately to insure full jars. Add boiling hot sirup made in the following proportions: For one dozen quart jars of red or black raspberries, bring to a boil seven cups of sugar and 11 cups of hot water. For loganberries use 10 cups of sugar and 10 cups of hot water. Fill the jars with sirup to one-half inch from the top and partially seal. In case of automatic seal type of jar, place lid and clamp on jar. Leave jars in the pan of hot water until all are ready to process.

Have hot water bath boiling. Place jars in boiler on a rack which raises the jars at least one-half inch from the bottom, with water one inch over the tops of the jars. Cover the container and bring to the boiling point again as soon as possible to help insure full jars. Boil 20 minutes, counting time from when the water is at a rolling boil. Remove jars immediately, complete the seal and invert to cool, except automatic type of seal.

Oven canning and other methods of food preservation are described in Extension Bulletin 450, "Home Food Preservation," which is available free at the office of the county agent or at the home economics extension office at Corvallis.

STUDENT TRAVELERS BACK; REPORT EDUCATIONAL TRIP.

CORVALLIS—Students in agricultural engineering at Oregon State college have returned from their month's bus trip to the midwest where they visited their national convention, educational and manufacturing institutions and the world's fair at Chicago. They reported it successful in every way.

Among the many educational features picked up on this self-financed trip was a visit to a huge Iowa ranch where 80 corn cultivators were being operated at one time, and where repairmen were getting mowers ready for use that were 33 years old. This was contrasted with the practice on many farms of discarding machinery in less than 10 years.

Well Cared For Trees Hardier.

McMINNVILLE—Peach and other fruit and nut trees which had been well cared for and entered last winter in good vigorous condition suffered less from the severe weather than those on poorer soil or those which had been wholly or partly neglected, observes S. T. White, county agent. He has visited many prune, walnut and peach orchards recently and has found that while the trees came out nicely and appeared to start well, certain branches, parts of trees, and occasionally whole trees, suddenly showed withering or dying, back of the foliage. Investigation showed them to be suffering from winter injury or lack of plant food.
