

FARM CO-OPERATIVE DIVISION

A MESSAGE TO EVERY MEMBER.

O. S. C. EXECUTIVE WARNS AGAINST RED PROPAGANDA.

College students of today should be trained as the rulers of tomorrow and not to become an undisciplined mob following the red flag of Communism, and faculty members have a responsibility in such training aside from the formal teaching of their respective courses, President George W. Peavy told the staff of Oregon State college at the opening of the fall term now underway there.

"There is no place for student or faculty communistic organizations on this campus," he declared, "and so far as I am able to exercise control, there will be no 'red' organizations and no 'red' parades while I am responsible for this institution."

President Peavy said this in no wise precludes the proper classroom study and examination of any system of government, but said that a clear distinction should be drawn between the examination of any governmental or social doctrine and its advocacy.

At the beginning of this, his first full year as head of this institution, President Peavy reviewed the general educational situation in Oregon and said that the skies have cleared as far as peaceful and orderly administration of the system is concerned, but that a serious "threat" hangs over all education from the grades to the colleges in the proposed 20-mill limitation amendment.

"Those who believe that an educated citizenry constitutes the bulwark of free institutions have a battle ahead," the president pointed out. "Much more is involved in the fight against this reactionary measure than the jobs of a few teachers and professors."

The executive pointed out that there is a decided increase in understanding, confidence and cooperation between the faculties of the state's two largest educational institutions and that they are presenting, more than ever before, a united front of adequate educational opportunity for the youth of Oregon.

DELUGE OF REPLIES SHOWS PULLING POWER OF PRESS.

The "pulling power" of the Oregon country press, as well as current interest in mining, was recently demonstrated by the results of a little news item sent to the weeklies and out-state dailies by the college news service at O.S.C.

This item announced that J. H. Batcheller, professor of mining and secretary of the state mining board, had prepared a mimeograph circular giving directions for identifying minerals found in Oregon, which would be sent free to anyone sending postage.

Within a few days from the time the story was printed Professor Batcheller began receiving a deluge of requests, some times at the rate of 30 to 40 a day. Within a week or so he had sent out about 300 circulars and the requests were still coming. He said he was almost embarrassed by the response as he was able to mail so many at a time that he didn't need to use the full amount of postage sent in.

"The majority of requests came from out-of-the-way places and apparently from prospectors who have small resources and are consequently not in a position to pay for elaborate books," said Professor Batcheller.

COLONEL THOMPSON IS NEW COMMANDANT OF O.S.C. ROTC.

CORVALLIS—Lieut. Colonel C. F. Thompson, recently returned from service in the Philippine Islands, has succeeded Colonel W. H. Patterson as commandant of the reserve officers training corp at Oregon State college. Colonel Thompson has had previous experience as commandant of cadets at Cornell university just prior to the world war. The new head of the military work at the college is a graduate of West Point with 18 months experience overseas on general staff duty.

The large increase in freshmen registration at the college this year has resulted in the largest military enrollment in several years. All freshmen and sophomore men, unless exempted for unusual reasons, take basic military training at the college, while juniors and seniors may elect to take advanced training for which they are given some compensation.

CARPENTER TO BE MARKET EXTENSION MAN AT O. S. C.

Paul Carpenter, for eight years extension specialist in agricultural economics at Montana State college, has been appointed to a similar position at Oregon State college, where he will succeed George O. Gatlin, resigned, as extension specialist in co-operative marketing.

Carpenter is already well known in many parts of Oregon having served both east and west of the mountains as county agent. He was for two years county agent in Polk county, and was then transferred to Baker county, serving for three years.

Born and reared on a farm in Minnesota and later trained in economics in the university of that state, Carpenter has had wide experience and outstanding success in the practical phases of the marketing problem, say extension officials at O.S.C. He was for three years manager of a cooperative dairy organization.

"Carpenter is unusually qualified by training, experience and personality to fill this important position in Oregon," says E. L. Potter, head of the division of agricultural economics at O.S.C. "He has been outstandingly successful in this field in Montana."

The new appointee will be unable to take over the Oregon position until about the middle of November.

Weed Killer Shipments Arrive.

DALLAS—Farmers of the McCoy, Oak Grove and Elkins districts recently received a shipment of 1100 pounds of sodium chlorate for fall application on their patches of Canada thistle. Nearly two tons of this chemical was used for this purpose last spring, says County Agent J. R. Beck, through whose office the orders for the material were pooled. Good progress has been made in killing Canada thistle, he says, although results on morning glory have not been so good.

DUST RECOMMENDED FOR SMUT ON WHEAT, BARLEY AND OATS.

CORVALLIS—In treating oats, barley and wheat for smut, dusting is a much simpler and more convenient method than formaldehyde, as it helps rather than hinders germination and causes no injury regardless of how long the grain is held before seeding, according to Bill Averill, Benton county agent.

Copper carbonate has been the standard dust treatment for smut on wheat, but many farmers are now reporting good control with ceresan dust with oats and barley, and even wheat too, according to Mr. Averill. Two ounces of ceresan are used to a bushel of grain, and it is applied the same as copper carbonate. In using either of these dusts, it is best to wear a respirator to avoid getting it in the lungs, he says. High test copper carbonate is essential, when that is used.

The most effective way of applying the dust treatment is with a mixing machine, Mr. Averill says. The smut spores are in the crevices of the grain, and the dust must come in contact with them if it is to do any good. It is not enough, he says, to spread the grain on the floor, sprinkle dust on it and shovel it over two or three times. It is possible to buy equipment that will thoroughly mix wheat, barley or oats with dust, and this equipment is not too expensive if several farmers of a cooperative frame of mind are willing to go in together. One such machine is now being used co-operatively in south Benton county.

AGRICULTURE WATCHES FREIGHT RATES.

Spokane, Wn.—Agriculture, vitally interested in the matter of freight rates, passed a resolution at a session of the Farm Rate council, in the Spokane offices of the North Pacific Grain Growers association, last week urging the interstate commerce commission to non-suit the railroads' petition for increased rates on agricultural products.

Charles M. Cook, director of the Farm Rate council acted as chairman of the special session to which all shippers, growers of agricultural products and representatives of all farm organizations were invited. Other resolutions asked the ICC to hurry decisions on pending cases where reduced rates on agricultural products are sought.

BLIGHT PROOF PEAR TREES ARE MARVELS IN UNIFORMITY.

Horticultural history will be made in southern Oregon this fall when what is believed to be the most uniform as well as the most blight resistant block of 500 young pear trees are planted out on the federal pear experiment station near Medford.

The trees are being selected from 2000 raised on the southern Oregon branch experiment station at Talent under the scientific methods developed by P. C. Reimer, superintendent and probably the world's leading authority on fire blight of pears.

These pear trees will be the most uniform, and hence the most desirable for experimental purposes, because every root stock in the entire lot was grown from seed produced on a single tree and fertilized with pollen from one other selected tree. Thus for the first time in history a large group of trees have been raised with exactly the same known parentage.

This uniformity applies, of course, only to the roots, but this is the most vital from the standpoint of uniform reaction to irrigation, fertilization and other soil treatments as well as to resistance to the dread root blight infection. Even the variation to be expected in seeds from the same parentage will be minimized through selection of the most uniform 500 from among the 2000, as shown in growth so far.

Body stock of this unusual group of trees is from the Old Home variety of pears, the most resistant named variety that makes a vigorous growth suitable for such purposes. After the trees have their main branches established, they will be top-worked to the kind of fruiting varieties desired, such as Bartlett, Anjou, and Bosc. Trees thus produced have all the advantages of the assured long life of the French root stock, and a vigorous growing trunk and main branch system, all of which are practically immune from blight attacks. Blight control may then be confined to the bearing wood with never any danger of losing the tree itself.

Hundreds of thousands of trees in southern Oregon alone have been destroyed in the past through ravages of blight infection that attacked the roots or trunks of pear trees. It is believed that from developments now attained such losses may in future plantings be completely eliminated.

GEORGE O'BRIEN IN ZANE GREY STORY.

George O'Brien returns to the screen in the splendid film, "Dude Rancher", which will be at the Oasis theatre Friday and Saturday.

There is an abundance of hard-riding, surprises, thrills, comedy and beautiful scenery in this film. The direction of Edward Cline is praiseworthy. He has kept his story fast-moving in a well knit continuity. His flair for creating comedy is again well demonstrated with laughs topping the entertainment. Irene Hervey is the kind of a leading lady you will want to see again. She photographs adorably and has a charming voice personality.
