PERMANENT LAND POLICY NEEDED TO SAVE EXPENSE.

Rural tax, debt and relief conditions in Oregon and other states have emphasized the need of a permanent land use policy which will help put farming on a more stable and profitable basis and reduce unnecessary public expense, says A. S. Burrier, farm management specialist at Oregon State college, who is acting as land planning consultant for this state.

"The need for a permanent land use policy for Oregon has been brought to the attention of federal, state and county officials by the prevalence of long-time tax and farm mortgage delinquency in many areas, a mounting demand for extension of public relief to rural families, and the threatened disruption of public services such as schools and roads in many communities due to an inadequate tax base," says Burrier.

The present land use problems in Oregon and other states are now being investigated by the National Resources board of the federal government, with the idea of having the information collected serve as a guide for a new land policy.

"The free-for-all methods that have prevailed in the past are responsible for the settlement of some lands unsuited to agriculture or for location of settlers in isolated areas," Burrier explained. "The costs of government and social facilities for families in such areas are usually in excess of their ability to pay."

"When good lands in established communities are still available, it would seem unwise and uneconomical to permit development of these unprofitable areas. Leaders of the proposed land policy movement believe that farming areas too poor to support families under normal conditions should be separated from better lands so that these sub-marginal lands may be put to more satisfactory use."

are several Oregon investigations that are designed to provide more detailed data on land use within the state. The Oregon State College experiment station, through the use of FERA funds, is now carrying on studies of tax delinquency, land ownership, and part-time farming, all of which are closely related to problems of land use in this state.

AAA BENEFIT CHECKS ADD TO OREGON FARM INCOMES.

Checks covering benefit payments to farmers cooperating in the wheat and the corn-hog adjustment programs are now arriving in Oregon in considerable volume. Baker, Union, Umatilla and Washington counties were the first four to receive the first installment of corn-hog payments, while Polk, Lane, Gilliam and Morrow were first to receive the second and third wheat payments.

Wheat growers who participated in the program are receiving a double payment at present, including the 1933 benefits and the first installment of 20 cents a bushel on the 1934 program. The checks are separate but are delivered at the same

These benefit payments are neither gifts nor subsidies, according to Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA, but are just as much a part of the farmers' earned income as the market price received.

The benefit payments are derived from processing taxes which the consumer pays when he buys the goods, but they go only to those growers who have agreed to do their part toward adjustment of production for the benefit of all producers, Davis explains.

The old pitfall in any form of united action tending to raise in prices of farm products to "parity" with other commodities, was that such a raise in prices would bring a rush to increased production which soon defeated the whole effort, AAA officials point out. The processing tax and contract idea was the first plan devised which would insure a greater price to those farmers who joined in a production control program than to others. The general market price is thus kept from fluctuating so much as to attract new producers or greatly increased planting by present growers.
