The St. Valentine motif was used to brighten the tables. As a later diversion for the evening, contract bridge was played, at the conclusion of which high honors went to Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Jackson, and second high to Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Christopherson.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Hermiston Union church was host at a pot-luck dinner Monday night at the church when members of Columbia Union visited here. Guests included Mrs. Effie Ritchey of Milton, Harold Gerking and Juanita Crawford of Adams, Kathryn Parker and Clarence Planting of Pendleton. Immediately following the dinner the visiting delegates met with standing committees and assisted in organizing work for the year.

A delightfully colorful dessert party was given in the American Legion hall Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. E. E. McPherson, Mrs. L. C. Ford and Mrs. Harold Rankin. The St. Valentine motif was cleverly carried out. Ten tables were in play during the afternoon with high honors going to Mrs. Ralph Richards, second high to Mrs. Frank Guitwits and consolation to Mrs. Roy Hale.

Miss Flora Brown, sister of the bride, sang "Because" just before the ceremony, and Miss Jane Horton played the wedding music. Bishop W. P. Remington read the service before an assemblage of 100 relatives and friends.

The bride, a popular member of Baker's younger set, was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white satin gown with a short train and a matching satin turban with rose veil. Her bouquet was lilacs of the valley and roses. Miss June DeFreese was maid of honor, and was attired in yellow moire with a hat to match. She carried yellow rosbuds.

Pack-Rat Cache Solves Mysteries.
CORVALLIS — Mysteries which may still be haunting some old time students of O.S.C. were cleared up recently when SERA workers tore out the interior of old Kidder hall to remodel it for class purposes. Hidden away in the walls of the old dormitory which served successively to house men and women students was found a pack-rat's cache containing a picture of a 1911 football hero, a 1924 magazine, a boxing glove, a confederate soldier's cap, a number of tennis balls, some celluloid collars, a dollar bill, and 55 cents in silver.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES FOUND NOTABLE FILM

One picture that can be recommended without reservation to all the members of every family is "Anne of Green Gables," which will be at the Oasis theatre Friday and Saturday.

Not only is this picture suitable for all ages in the negative quality of containing nothing objectionable, but it also offers positive and substantial entertainment for anyone. The story of Anne Shirley, who came from an orphanage to bring romance into the set lives of an ageing spinster and her bachelor brother, is simple of construction, but much of its charm lies in that self-same Gothic quality of directness.

Moreover, the tale is told with an artistry that appreciates just what kind of story it is and respects it accordingly. It is the kind of story that easily could have been made too sweet and cloying, but the skill with which it has been presented makes it a remarkable production in that the members of the intelligentsia can freely admit having enjoyed it and still wish their children to see it, too.

STUNTS HARD? DOUG MAKES 'EM HARDER.

Stunts don't come so dangerous or difficult that Douglas Fairbanks won't try them. The athletic star, who is famous for his feats of daring, has never used a double, and is so far from avoiding danger that he seems actually to court it.

An instance of this occurred during the filming of "The Private Life of Don Juan." Doug's new London Films production released through United Artists and showing Sunday and Monday at the Oasis theatre. In one scene the script of this romantic comedy from the pens of Frederick Lonsdale and Lajos Biro called for Doug to climb to the balcony of one of his many loves and, finding the long French windows locked against him, hammer on them until he broke them open.

During the rehearsals Doug followed the script to the letter, but as soon as the cameras started turning, he took a running jump and leapt clear of shattering glass and splintering woodwork. Fortunately, no damage beyond a few cuts was sustained, but the danger was deadly.

In another scene where he climbs up an eighty foot castle wall, he could easily have used a double and saved himself not only the risk but the fatigue of the repeated takes required as well. But each ascent was made by Doug personally, and there were no knots in the rope or footholds on the castle walls to make it easier for him either.

Grimm Alfalfa Seed Grown.

DALLAS—Mrs. May Yocum of Ballston has, for the third successive year, obtained a good yield of fine quality seed from her 12-acre field of Grimm alfalfa, reports County Agent J. R. Beck. This year she has 2,400 pounds of certified blue-tag seed, which apparently has all the characteristics of the native seed stock which came from Montana, he says. Seed from her planting is being used in two alfalfa nurseries in Polk county and on the Harney branch experiment station at Burns.

YOUR CHILD AND THE SCHOOL
By Dr. ALLEN G. IRELAND
Director, Physical and Health Education
New Jersey State Department of Public Instruction

Learning at Luncheon
No one really expects children to have a knowledge of their nutritional needs, or calories, vitamins and the like.

If left to themselves with an opportunity to choose, they would eat chiefly of those things that "taste good." Hence, a problem faces parents and teachers alike, for when such important information is available we can't just let it accumulate and lay idle. It is too significant to health and success and happiness. It must be put to work in the lives of people.

But the majority of parents either do not have scientific knowledge of foods and nutrition or they don't know how best to teach children. Thus the responsibility falls to the educational institution of the community which these same parents support and to the staff of teachers who understand how to make knowledge function in the lives of children.

It is in this light that the school lunch is taking form. Instead of being just a convenience for those who can't go home at noon, it is coming to be regarded as a learning situation. It is a laboratory where one of the chief essentials of life is practiced in a correct manner until habits and attitudes are formed. Parents say that a good school lunch situation influences food selection and table manners at home. Principals say it makes for better school morale. And the pupils approve because they like it.

What about home work? Dr. Ireland will discuss it next week.

FARM PROFIT OUTLOOK SHOW GOOD PROSPECT.

Substantial improvement in the relationship between farm income and farm costs in Oregon is shown by data given in the annual report of the agricultural economics section of the Oregon agricultural extension service on the general outlook for farming in 1935 which has just been released for distribution through the offices of the county agricultural agents.

"Farm income from sales and adjustment payments combined is expected to be larger during the first half of 1934 but after mid-year the situation is more uncertain," ac-ording to the circular. However, with higher prices for animal products expected and a greater volume of crops for market probable, it is likely that farm income will be maintained.

In regard to the cost outlook, the report indicates some further advance during 1935, based on the trend of farm and family expenses. While expenses may increase enough to largely offset the expected moderate increase in farm income, all types of farming considered, the report points out that certain enterprises will undoubtedly fare better than others.

With some exceptions, the market outlook during the next year is more favorable for animal products than for crop products, says the circular. Prices for meat animals will undoubtedly be much higher than in 1934, while feed grains and hay produced in 1935 are likely to be much lower, as the supply of feed in relation to livestock numbers in the country as a whole is expected to be much larger if growing conditions are about average, according to the report.

OREGON SEED GROWERS TO SEE INCREASING DEMAND.

Greater prosperity for Oregon seed growers with opportunity to expand production of all kinds of grasses and legumes is seen by E. R. Jackman, extension agronomist of Oregon State college, who recently returned from special service in Washington, D. C.

Much seed will be required in the middle west, which is planning on a vast expansion of acreage of forage crops. The last two drought years killed much of their alfalfa, blue grass and timothy meadows, and hay crops of all kinds.

The crop reduction programs allow farmers to plant forage crops on acres withdrawn from corn and wheat, and this aggregates millions of acres. Then, too, the attention of many middle western people is concentrated upon soil erosion to a greater extent than ever before, and the only permanent way to prevent erosion is to keep the lands in grasses and legumes as much of the time as possible, says Jackman.

In the southern states a huge winter cover crop program is just beginning, which the people there say means greatly increased demands for hairy vetch, Austrian winter peas and crimson clover seed.

Every part of the state may share in this increased demand, says Jackman. Coast counties specialize in bent grass and reed canary grass, and the Willamette valley in peas, vetch, clover, and many grasses. The demand for Ladak and other alfalfa, and crested wheat grass and alsike clover from eastern Oregon promises to be good.

Growers of red clover in the Willamette valley have been heartened by the demand now existing for the Tennessee anthracnose-resistant strain. One carload was shipped recently from Yamhill county at a premium of several cents and future demand looks favorable.

Last year Oregon's seed crop brought more than two million dollars into the state, Jackman estimates, an amount which he believes may be doubled.

FARM PLANNING DISCUSSED IN LATE O.S.C. CIRCULAR.

Information on planning the farm business, with lists of farm management bulletins and market reports, and a budget form are contained in a circular letter on the agricultural situation released by the Oregon State college extension service.

"The basis of a good farm plan is a carefully prepared budget of expected receipts and expenses. Farm records are very helpful in farm budget planning," says the circular.

In addition to the budget form, Oregon farmers may also obtain from the county agricultural agents free of charge, a sample farm account book furnished by the agricultural adjustment administration.

Twenty-two bulletins are listed in the circular which contain information to aid farmers in planning the farm business. A complete catalogue and calendar of outlook, market, price and crop reports issued by the agricultural extension service is also given, and a list of circulars available by mail from various market news offices of the bureau of agricultural economics of the United States department of agriculture.

Outlook information may be used in planning the farm business to assist in estimating the probable income from various crop and livestock products and the probable expenses for farm operation, and family maintenance, says the circular.
