HONOR PLEDGING REVISED AT O.S.C. TO SAVE FUNDS.

CORVALLIS—A new system of election to honor fraternities at Oregon State college which is designed to save the students the expense of too much "joining" and possibly to allow some of the less needed honor fraternities to die out, has been adopted by the college officials.

This action is the outgrowth of the ultimatum issued a year ago by President G. W. Peavy that all honor fraternities had to justify themselves and show that they were operating economically.

The new plan adopted requires that none of the 37 honor societies on the campus may announce pledges except at the time twice a year, once in the fall and again in the spring. A student eligible for membership in several honor societies may thus choose among them if he so desires. He can also reject any election without embarrassment.

Honor societies on all college campuses elect outstanding students to membership in the various fields. There are a few honor societies that are general in nature covering the entire campus. Others apply to individual schools or departments. Some are professional in character in the fields of elective study, such as journalism, music or speech at Oregon State college.

It is thus possible for some students to qualify for as high as five or six honor societies, and if they accept them all the financial drain is great. When each society pledges at a different time the student has no way of knowing whether to reject a bid, for he may not later be elected to another society to which he aspires.

The action of the college was based on a report of the student-faculty committee which spent the last year in a careful study of the situation through questionnaires filled out by students, alumni and faculty including both members and non-members of honor societies. It was agreed by the majority of all groups that honor fraternities perform a real function in encouraging scholarship and promoting professional advancement, but that the system needs more careful regulation, such as it is hoped, will be afforded under the new program.

O.S.C. WILD LIFE GROUP GIVEN LIVE BEAVER PET.

CORVALLIS—Organization of the first student wild life conservation club in the United States and the acquisition by it of the first live beaver mascot are recent achievements of students enrolled in the new course in fish, game and fur animal management at Oregon State college.

The new group selected the name "Ding Darling Wild Life Club" in honor of the present cartoonist head of the federal biological survey whose cooperation made possible establishment of the wild life course here. Members of the biological survey staff recently captured a full-grown beaver in Mary's river which has been turned over to the club as a campus mascot.

Officers of the club are Willard Jarvis, Corvallis, president; Frank Groves, Amity, vice-president; Margaret Whipple, Vancouver, Wn., secretary; Allena Brown, Corvallis, reporter; and Stanley Jewett, Jr., Portland, sergeant-at-arms.
