

Considering how fine this railroad transportation is nowadays, you can't travel any cheaper. Fares lowest in history—substantial savings on round trip tickets. So why not take the train? It's safer. It's more dependable.

You can't beat the improved travel comfort in coaches and sleeping cars. It's a good thing movies don't have such restful seats—most folks would sure fall asleep.

Ever hear about the Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight? It's a great convenience to shippers and receivers alike. Western railroads pick up at the door, ship by fast freight, and deliver to consignee's door.

Railroad trains are running on faster schedules these days. Seems like the iron horse wants to show these new streamlined diesels that he can step out, too. Both passenger and freight schedules have been speeded up.

What's more, the railroads believe in "safety first." Last year not one passenger was killed in a train accident on western railroads.

Talk to your local railroad agent. He's full of information about traveling and shipping.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

GUADALUPE ISLAND VICTIM OF GREED

Guarded Now to Save Seal From Extinction.

Washington.—On lonely Guadalupe Island, 140 miles off the coast of Lower California, Mexican soldiers guard the once plentiful elephant seal from extinction at the hands of hunters and collectors. About 150 six-months-old baby seals have found refuge on this desert island, which has been a government reservation since 1922.

"Once lords of the precipitous, volcanic shores of Guadalupe were the fur seals, whose myriad herds wore smooth the rough rocks of their rookeries," says the National Geographic society. "Hunters came, saw, and conquered. Score: 200,000 pelts, value about $6,000,000. Result: extinction of the Guadalupe fur seal, one of the world's most valuable fur bearers.

What Might Have Been
"Scientists have estimated that if only the annual increase of the original herd had been killed, the Guadalupe rookery would today yield an income of $750,000 a year.

"In an attempt to restore some economic value to the island, goat raising was begun many decades ago. The herds multiplied rapidly, an estimate of 1922 placing the goat population at around 50,000. But the venture was a financial failure. Now these omnivorous aliens are gradually eating themselves into oblivion.

"Barren, boulder-strewn Guadalupe has a desert climate. After times of drouth, thousands of goat skeletons whiten on the narrow beaches and in the infernal canyons. Although Guadalupe's goats have learned to quench their thirst with sea water, they cannot yet convert stones into fodder.

"In 1875 a visiting naturalist called Guadalupe a botanical paradise; but members of a recent expedition had to shoot specimens of some plants from inaccessible cliff ledges beyond the reach of the nimble-footed goats. Seedlings have no chance. Unless carefully fenced reservations are set aside, the Guadalupe stands of oak, pine, palm, cypress and cedar are doomed to extinction. Seeds of some trees have been collected and planted in California, where they flourish.

Cats and Mice Abound.

"Either soldiers stationed on Guadalupe, or goat herders, brought cats which, after failure of the goat project, became part of the local wild life. The cats preyed on petrels, wrens, flickers, and other birds. As a result, some varieties of birds are already extinct.

Mice came to the island in ships or baggage. Insects, seeds and snails provide food for them. While for the moment the cats prefer a bird diet, it is only a matter of time until the lack of feathered food will turn the hungry cats mouseward.

"The high, northern end of Guadalupe sometimes penetrates the clouds. It is here that the island's limited forests cling to the stony soil. Cypress groves on the west-facing ridges comb moisture out of the fogs to refresh their foliage and trickle down among their roots. Elsewhere, the island is a desert of the most arid type. The high levels of the north are often chilled with raw winds. One visitor found spring two months later in this area than in the sun-baked lowlands ten miles to the south.

"About four times the size of Manhattan island, Guadalupe has no towns or permanent settlement. A few houses clustered about the principal harbor, on the northeast coast, are left-overs from goat-raising days. At intervals, small detachments of Mexican soldiers are stationed there. Ensenada, on the Mexican coast, is the nearest mainland port of any importance."

Successful Hay Fever Remedy Found by British

London.—After an extended trial lasting more than five years authorities in the physiotherapy department of St. George's hospital, London, are satisfied they have developed a treatment for hay fever. During the trial period the treatment has been successful in 99 per cent of the cases.

The treatment involves application by electricity of a coating of ionized zinc to the inside of the nostrils. Three or four applications are given, after which the majority of the patients are free from attacks of ordinary hay fever for a year. Precautionary applications are given at the end of the year and again a year later. Thereafter there is no recurrence of the trouble.

Many cases were recorded in which patients previously were unable to visit rural districts on account of severe attacks of hay fever. They are now able to do so without any ill effects after the treatment.

Bushes for Bird Covers Are Offered by Hunters

Visalia, Calif.—The local Sportsmen's association has devised a new project for assuring sufficient game for hunting. They have offered to supply all ranchmen with blackberry sprouts, which in turn will furnish the ranchers with blackberries and provide a cover for game birds.
