OREGON TURKEY GROWERS ASK ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Oregon turkey growers found the first state industry convention at Oregon State college in August so interesting that close to 300 in attendance voted unanimously to ask the college to make the event an annual affair. The attendance was much larger than was expected and the day proved too short to include all of the discussion desired by the growers. A number suggested that next year's convention be made a two-day affair.

Turkey mycosis is a disease term greatly abused in its modern use, until it practically has no significance any more, Dr. W. T. Johnson, poultry pathologist at O.S.C., told the turkey growers. It was formerly applied to a certain fungus infection of the crop, but it is now loosely used for all sorts of fungus infections and some that may not be.

There is so much that veterinarians do not know about this and other turkey diseases that the field is a fertile one for misrepresentation and exploitation, says Dr. Johnson. For the fungus infection of the crop there is no certain preventative known, although an almost specific cure is the use of copper sulfate (blue vitrol) at the rate of 1 ounce to 15 gallons of drinking water. This has only been recommended where the disease occurs and is not to be considered a blanket recommendation for use with all ages and at all times, he warned.

The turkey industry is now returning Oregon growers around 3 million dollars a year, said H. E. Cosby, head of the poultry department at O.S.C. The growth of the industry has been rapid in the last decade.

Oregon turkeys are from well bred stock in general and are so well handled that they command a premium on the better markets of the country, according to H. P. Griffin, field manager of the Northwestern Turkey Growers' association. This association, which is a federation of cooperative growers' units from eight states, expects to handle 12 million pounds of turkeys this year, which makes it the largest single turkey marketing concern in the world. Four regional Oregon groups comprise the Oregon Turkey Growers' association, which in turn is affiliated with the Northwestern.

CONSUMERS' COOPERATIVES IN ACTION.

NEW YORK CITY—The largest "Tour to Cooperative Europe" sponsored by The Cooperative League of the U. S. A. sailed for Europe July 10. The itinerary called for visits to cooperatives in Scotland, England, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Russia and Denmark. Three college professors, two Agricultural Extension men, five students, two high school teachers, two managers of cooperatives, one president of a cooperative and the president of a Cooperative Women's Guild, a statistician and a public relations council specializing in consumers problems comprise the cooperative party which will complete its journey September 1.

MINNEAPOLIS—Midland Cooperative Wholesale added twenty-nine new cooperatives to its member societies during the last year, bringing its total to 145 and increased its business 38 per cent for a new record of $2,423,000 in 1935. One of the most important decisions of the Annual Meeting June 8 and 9 was the approval of the five year revolving fund plan which provides for the payment of the patronage earnings of the wholesale to the member associations in cash after a period of five years during which time earnings are credited to the retail societies. The plan does not affect the payment of retail patronage dividends and makes possible expansion without calling on local co-ops to pay out of their treasuries for wholesale plant.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Consumers' Cooperation became big political as well as economic news with the appointment by President Roosevelt of a special Commission of Inquiry on Cooperative Enterprise in Europe. The original commission, which sailed for Europe, July 1, included Jacob Baker, Assistant Administrator of the Works Progress Administration, chairman; Leland Olds, secretary of the New York State Power Authority, and Charles E. Stuart of the New York engineering firm of Saur, James and Cooke. Response to the appointment of the commission was so great that the commission was enlarged to include two farm representatives, Robin Hood, secretary, Cooperative Marketing Council, and Clifford Gregory, editor, The Prairie Farmer, and one woman representative, Miss Emily Bates of Kansas City. The last three appointees expected to join the commission in Stockholm or Copenhagen.

NEW YORK CITY—Joseph Martinek, editor of Provo Lidu, second largest labor paper in Czechoslovakia, and former member of the board of directors of The Cooperative League of the U. S. A., described recent developments in the cooperative movement in Czechoslovakia to a group of cooperators at a special banquet, July 7. "Cooperatives, labor unions and working class political parties have made it possible for my country to remain a democratic island in a sea of dictatorship," Mr. Martinek declared.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace, put himself definitely on record as an advocate of Consumers Cooperation in two recent publications. In an article, "The Search for an American Way" in the July issue of Scribner's he declared: "In the economic world it is inevitable that more and more emphasis is going to be laid on the idea of cooperation as distinguished from free competition. The only way in which democracy can survive the logical onslaught of the dictator-state aspect of Communism and Fascism is to develop the genuine cooperative idea to the limit. Producers cooperatives are not enough. . . . The Cooperative way of life must pervade the community, and this means there must be consumers' cooperatives as well as producers' cooperatives and ultimately industrial cooperatives."

Expanding these ideas to a greater degree, Secretary Wallace devotes most of the final chapter of his new book, "Whose Constitution?" to an explanation of his concept of the new economic order. "The philosophy of the future will endeavor to reconcile the good which is in the competitive individualistic and libertarian concepts of the nineteenth century with the cooperative concepts which seem to me destined to dominate the late twentieth century. . . . A cooperative economic society is the living stream of thought for the twentieth century as a democratic political society was for the eighteenth."

MINNEAPOLIS—A special ten day College Cooperative Institute held at Hamline University June 15-26 brought together thirteen college men and women from seven Minnesota colleges and Universities. The Institute was conducted under the auspices of Midland Cooperative Wholesale.

NEW YORK CITY—The American Peoples School, Van Courtlandt Park, is conducting a Cooperative Leadership Training School as a special feature of its summer sessions. Merlin Miller, professor of History and Economics, College of Emporia, Emporia, Kansas, is directing the cooperative school. Among the speakers assisting in special courses are Esther Greenleaf, director, Cooperative Design Service; R. N. Benjamin, president, Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Cooperative Association; Wallace J. Campbell, Assistant Secretary, The Cooperative League; Robert Smith, Educational Director, Eastern Cooperative Wholesale, and Mark Starr, educational director, International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

WAUKEGAN, ILLINOIS—The Cooperative Trading Company completed its first quarter century of successful operation May 5th and staged an impressive celebration of its progress May 23. During its 25 years the cooperative has grown from 62 to 2,000 members and has developed a trade which last year totaled $600,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—The Eastern States Farmers' Exchange established a new record for itself in June by distributing 1329 cars of poultry, dairy and livestock feed, an increase of 26.6 per cent over the 1094 cars distributed in June, 1935. Paint purchases were nearly double those of last year. Substantial increases were also made in field and vegetable seeds, fertilizer, disinfectants and pest controls. Membership in the cooperative had jumped to 62,000 in the spring of 1936, an increase of 6,000 over the membership the previous year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO — Forty-one students from 13 states attended the first National Cooperative Recreation School held at Camp Wildwood, June 1 to 13. The school was dedicated to the extension of creative expression and included in its curriculum drama, folk dancing, folk songs, singing games, design, sketching and architecture. The faculty included Miss Neva Boyd, professor of sociology, Northwestern University; Mrs. Charlotte Choppening, playwright and member of the staff of Goodman Theatre, Art Institute, Chicago; Mrs. Esther Greenleaf, director, Cooperative League Design Service, New York; Mrs. Alta Mae Calkins, music instructor, Columbus, Ohio; Lynn Rohrbaugh, manager, Cooperative Recreation Service, Delaware, Ohio; Mary Wimble, pianist, Sullivan, Indiana, and Carl Hutchison, member of the education staff of the Ohio Farm Bureau Cooperative Association and Director of the Institute.

A permanent Cooperative Association for Recreation Education was elected by the members of the school to continue the work of the school.

LAKESIDE, OHIO—A thousand delegates to the "Christian Youth Conference of North America" meeting here June 24-28 endorsed the following resolution on Consumers Cooperation: "We are convinced that the present economic system is unchristian in its motivation, operation and results, and that a Christian economic order can be obtained only by a fundamental change. It is our conviction that Christian youth should support the principles and methods of the Rochdale cooperative movement as an effective Christian technique."

WOODRIDGE, NEW YORK—The Associated Cooperative Fire Insurance Companies of Sullivan and adjoining counties announced a reduction of 10 per cent in its assessment rate this year. With the cut of 20 per cent in assessment made last year the cooperatives are able to insure dwellings for approximately forty per cent of the cost in private companies. The cooperative set $10,000 addition to the contingent loss reserve, added 165 new members, bringing the total membership to 1840 and the outstanding insurance to $13,905,000.

NEW YORK CITY—Consumers' Union, independent consumer-controlled testing organization, carried in the June issue of Consumers' Union Reports a special study of gasolines. Of the thirty-two gasolines tested Consumers' Union classified "Co-op" Regular as one of the six "best buys" in the United States and ranked it first for Mid-West consumers.

FITCHBURG, MASS.—The executive committee of the Massachusetts League of Cooperative Clubs has received communications from the cooperative youth organizations of England and France suggesting the formation of an international organization of cooperative youth. Officials of the organization felt that a national organization should be formed before any part could be taken in the international organization. They request that all youth leagues and federations send representatives to the Congress of The Cooperative League of the U.S.A., in Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 8, 9 and 10, to form the nucleus for a national youth organization.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN—The Milwaukee Consumers' Cooperative Association, originated by and among Negroes, is raising capital in penny banks placed in the homes of members who deposit three cents a day. More than $600 capital has already been accumulated and the cooperative is expected to open for business within the next few months.

COLUMBUS, OHIO—Ohio farmers making use of the Farm Bureau Agricultural Credit Corporation have saved an average of ten per cent on the cost of fertilizer and other farm supplies by paying cash with

"Ford equipment has contributed to our success"

"Our salesmen cover a lot of territory and make frequent stops. It's hard work for a truck but the performance of our Fords has always been extremely satisfactory. Our drivers are continually praising these new Ford V-8's for their easy riding qualities, comfortable cabs, appearance, soft "clinging" brakes and all-around ease of handling.

"As a fleet operator, I am more than satisfied from the angle of economy, suitability and dependability. We can truthfully say that the use of Ford equipment since 1914 has materially contributed to our success."
