HOG CHOLERA QUARANTINE

ORDER ISSUED BY STATE DEPT.

The unusual movement of feeder swine from the drouth states is responsible for action taken by Dr. W. H. Lytle, Chief of the Division of Animal Industry of the State Department of Agriculture to protect Oregon stockmen against the introduction of hog cholera. Instruction just received by the County Agricultural Agent's office at Pendleton are as follows:

"The infectious and communicable disease known as hog cholera, or swine plague having been prevalent in all states of the Union, particularly those states known as the drouth states, from which a considerable number of feeder swine are being shipped and otherwise imported into the State of Oregon, and which may be the means of communicating infection to the swine of the State of Oregon if such importations are not carefully guarded, the Division of Animal Industry, Oregon State Department of Agriculture, in compliance with Section 20-103 of the Livestock Sanitary Laws of Oregon, reading in part as follows:

'Oregon Code 1930, Section 20-103. It shall be the duty of the state Livestock Sanitary Board (State Division of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture) to exercise a general sanitary supervision over the livestock and poultry of this state and as far as possible to protect the livestock and poultry of this state from disease; to take all measures necessary and proper in the judgment of the Board to eradicate infectious, contagious and communicable diseases that may exist among livestock or poultry in the state, etc.'

Whereby orders that all swine imported into the State of Oregon shall be held in quarantine for 21 days and be kept separate and apart from all other Oregon swine not vaccinated more than 21 days previously with the serum simultaneous anti-hog cholera vaccine and covered by an official health certificate, on the place or upon the premises designated by the Chief, Division of Animal Industry, or the County Veterinarian. "Exceptions are to be made in the case of swine that pass through the Union Stock Yards of Portland and in the case of such fat and mature swine as may be imported for purposes of immediate slaughter within 10 days.

"All state police officers and veterinary sanitary officers are hereby requested to assist in the enforcement of this order.

"Dated this 18th day of September, 1936."

W. H. Lytle, Division Chief.

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PULLS THROUGH.

Standing out prominently on the wall of the office of the manager of the Amalgamated Cooperative Apartments in Van Cortlandt Park, N. Y., is a letter from then governor Franklin D. Roosevelt dated Nov. 26, 1930, extending his best wishes at the dedication of America's largest cooperative apartments. Keying the tone of the letter is a quotation from the late Charles Steinmetz, "Cooperation is not a sentiment; it is an economic necessity."

Two years after the completion of the cooperative project, the financial and real estate structure of New York collapsed. Owners, second mortgage holders and certificate holders found their property thrown into bankruptcy. Between sixty and seventy per cent of the real estate in the Metropolitan area went through bankruptcy or found itself in intense financial difficulty. Rent scales crashed and property was rented at prices bearing very slight relationship to cost.

As the depression deepened, sixty, fifty-five, and as high as seventy per cent of the members of the Amalgamated co-op were unemployed. The severity of the situation intensified as the cooperative found it necessary not only to house but to feed its members. But good management and the loyalty of the members brought the co-op through. In 1932 and 1933 the Van Cortlandt Park cooperative allotted rebates of $37,500, which the membership then voted to put into a reserve fund. In 1934 and 1935 the Grand Street cooperative not only carried itself but made such savings that $16,000 in rent rebates were paid to members. It is estimated that the present year will find rebates doubled with the possibility of two, three or four weeks rental saved on the operation for the year.

Two hundred and thirty families in the Grand Street project, lower East side, and six hundred families in the Van Cortlandt Park co-op have become miniature communities in themselves. The cooperative principles, successful in Lousing, have been extended to services. Milk, electricity, laundry, grocery stores, bus service, drama, recreation and entertainment have been placed on a cooperative basis. Cooperative services aggregated $250,000 in 1935. Savings ran from five per cent up on many of the items and services, otherwise out of reach, were brought to members of the cooperative.

The Van Cortlandt Park cooperative was completed in 1927 at a total cost of $3,700,000. The Grand Street project, oasis in lower New York's tenement section, was built two years later at a cost of $1,425,000. Members own stock in the cooperative and lease individual apartments. To prevent speculation no member is allowed to sell his stock on the open market—the Cooperative will buy it back from the member at face value. Rentals, based on use value, consequently do not rise and fall with the vicissitudes of the real estate market. At no time have rentals increased since the erection of the cooperative.

New York Edison furnished the cooperative with light and power on a joint contract for the entire Van Cortlandt project until a year ago. At the request of the Utility, the New York State Public Service Commission voided contractual lighting contracts. Amalgamated then negotiated for the erection of a diesel plant to furnish its own power. The plant will be completed in September and will, according to Manager A. E. Kazan, save members of the cooperative $15,000 a year more than the original contract rate. New York Edison has since offered in vain to return to the previous arrangement. With lower power rates electric cooking, refrigeration and other services will grow in popularity, increasing the output and lowering prices still further.

NEW YORK CITY—"England's widely heralded economic recovery has been due to social security legislation and the increase of purchasing power made possible by the expansion of consumers' cooperatives which have become Britain's biggest business," declared Hon. A. V. Alexander, Member of Parliament, in an interview here.

"English cooperatives, which last year did a total business of $1,101,000,000, not only provided lower prices to their 7,500,000 members but also paid back to their members more than $120,000,000 in savings.

"In the city of Sheffield, which I represent in Parliament," said Mr. Alexander, "the National Government paid out $6,250,000 to the municipal government in one year for unemployment relief. In the same year the local cooperative societies paid out to their members the same amount, $6,250,000. Had it not been for the cooperatives the amount borrowed by the municipality would have been doubled."

Sir Fred Hayward, President of the Cooperative Union of Great Britain, who with Mr. Alexander represented Great Britain at the Institute of Pacific Relations Conference at Yosemite Park, pointed out that "wages of cooperative employees are from ten shillings to two pounds a week higher than those paid employees in the private distributive trade. Hours of work in the cooperatives average from 46 to 47 a week as compared to a 52 to 60 hour week in private profit industry. At least 95 per cent of the cooperative workers are members of trade unions, while less than 5 per cent of the employees of private profit distributors are members of unions."

Referring to the threat of fascism in Europe, Mr. Alexander said, "the existence of great democratic organizations such as the Cooperative Movement is the greatest preventive of dictatorship and is effective because it acts as a bulwark against the rise of fascism rather than as a punitive instrument to be used after dictatorship has come into power."

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Rural Electrification Administration reported August 5 that it had earmarked or loaned $21,400,000 for 116 rural electric projects. Cooperative projects in Indiana, Ohio, Minnesota and Virginia have been the first completed with several thousand members of cooperatives already securing light and power. It is estimated that more than half the appropriations allotted have been to cooperative associations.
