PIONEER PERSONALS

The following personal items were prepared for the Thirty Year Anniversary edition, but along with other items and historical articles, they were delayed in publication because of lack of space. The Herald will continue to publish similar items and asks that its readers give the necessary information.

J. B. Beebe came to Hermiston in 1907, from Michigan. He opened a restaurant and shipped in the first car load of coal. In 1909 he and members of his family filed on a section of land two miles southeast of Hermiston and has lived there since. Part of the land is now soon to be supplied with water from extension of the Stanfield canal. Mr. Beebe follows well drilling as a trade. He has a wife and 14 children.

Mrs. Herbert Shesely wore a sun-bonnet during the Umatilla Project, made and worn by Mr. Shesely's grandmother. It was a very costly bonnet made of horsehair weave. The Sheselys have been in Hermiston nearly 20 years.

P. P. Sullivan arrived in Hermiston with his family from Iowa the spring of 1907. He maintained and operated a dairy and poultry ranch of 35 acres near town. Mrs. Sullivan passed away a few years ago, and the five sons and daughters, except Mrs. David Middlesdorf, live elsewhere.

Mrs. F. L. Kelley came here in 1915. The first season she canned 1000 pounds of peaches. Mrs. Kelley had never seen such peaches and she canned enough for her own family and most of her relatives. At that time many young peach orchards were in heavy production.

Frank Gulwits arrived in Hermiston in 1910, and located on a 20 acre homestead, which he still occupies in the third unit. He was married in 1915 to Joyce Roderick who had taught school during the first daays of Irrigon.

W. E. Goodwin came here from Montana in 1907, and bought land in section 36 northeast of town, which became a part of the sandy area.

Tom Jensen (Soren) came here from life on the high seas, in 1907, and was one of the first plumbers and concrete workers.

W. W. Felthouse and Mrs. Felthouse arrived in Hermiston in 1913. They owned then 140 acres of sagebrush land which later they planted to alfalfa. To this was added 40 acres more which Mr. Felthouse improved. They lived on the land until this work was done and then moved to Hermiston where Mr. Felthouse has been engaged in buying hay for a number of years. Mr. Felthouse is a graduate of Whitman college, as well as his son Bill. A daughter Margaret is a senior at O.S.C. and a son Gale is in grade school.

PIONEER HOG HISTORY

Hogs have taken an important place in the development of agricultural products in this irrigated region. As soon as alfalfa was well established the number and breeds of hogs increased. H. J. Stillings chose the big type Poland China on his homestead of 40 acres in 1909 and continued in the business 20 years. He advertised and sold pure bred types throughout the Pacific coast including Alaska, and became widely known among hog breeders for the high grade of his type of breeding.

C. P. Adams, often known as Pig Adams, and C. C. Mason turned their attention to the red type. They each had from ten to 20 purebred sows and produced from 150 to 200 pigs a year. They exhibited five successive years at the state fair and one year took 55 percent of the places, and 65 percent of the premium money.

One year Mason took five of the eight champions and the next year three of the eight champion awards. It was at the state fair that their hogs were infected with cholera and Adams lost nearly every hog he had, and Mason his best animals. This was the only cholera epidemic experienced here.

George Strohm was for many years a heavy producer of market hogs. He shipped 35 cars to Portland and at the Pacific International Livestock Show, won over $1200 in prizes. During the cholera time he lost 230 head.

J. F. McNaught, when he owned the 200 acre farm near Hermiston,

year's flock of bronze birds. She states that she made a profit of $1.50 per bird above feed costs. The birds now roost on locust poles four feet from the ground, from which droppings are cleaned regularly. The brooder houses are moved to alfalfa range, re-seeded each year. All birds are tattooed.

Mrs. Hiatt said, as a safeguard against poultry thieves.

Mrs. Hiatt is assisted by her small daughter Dorothy who is eleven years of age. They first lived in the Minnehaha district, later moving to the Jewett place where they have been for the past two years.
