TURKEY PAYROLL
With the price of turkeys only fair to medium, the growers will not receive the profit which should reward such excellent production and such coordinated effort in marketing. Yet the turkey business on the whole is growing into a large industry here. Its employment feature is strong. Not only is the grower and part of his family, which constitute a great many persons nowadays, kept busy a large part of the year in bringing to a marketable stage the day old poults, but witness the number of persons in the picking sheds, and at the packing house. Figure the amount of money paid out directly for labor to local people handling birds. Add to it the number employed producing and processing and handling feeds.

To the above may be added construction and installation of equipment and many other features involving labor incident to the local industry that is now filling freight cars and loading trucks at the Eastern Oregon Turkey Growers' association warehouse, where crates of primes are being sent out to all parts of the country.
These, also, not only advertise the quality of birds and methods of handling here, but they bring home the bacon that is dealt out to the many helpers who are doing the job so well.

WHERE NEXT!
The river question seems to be alive and growing but in which direction it develops no one seems to predict.
What will become of the Umatilla rapids is the problem. It arises invariably as the key to the whole situation. One boat line proposes to get to Attalia. It essays to climb the ledges and whirlpools of the Umatilla rapids but will stop before it gets out of breath at Homly rapids. Another proposes to mount the hazards as far as just across the state line beyond Juniper with an iron-clad new boat like no one has ever seen before.
Engineers grant that they do not know just what they are doing when they spend $600,000 deepening a channel from Celilo to Umatilla and admit, for sake of present argument, that they may have to drown out the rapids through which they are channelling. They do hit the proposition of the high dam at The Dalles which would put Hermiston 150 feet under water and bury Pasco and Kennewick in the bottom of the new sea.
So maybe we are getting somewhere with all this discussion. Instead of turning all these towns, farms, highways and railroads into the United States treasury, and drawing on Morgantheau for funds to build more towns and railroads and highways, and making more farms, we, in this inland forgotten country, will be allowed to stay on terra firma, and not become fishermen on a great lake.
The next question is, where do we go from here?

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SERVICES
In accordance with established custom to express annually on Thanksgiving day gratitude for divine protection and blessings experienced throughout the year, First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Hermiston, Oregon, held a Thanksgiving service on Thursday morning in the Legion hall.
Before the close of the service the First Reader announced that a brief opportunity would be given for testimonies by Christian Scientists appropriate for the occasion, and many present expressed gratitude for heal-ings and benefits received through Christian Science. The service ended with the benediction from Psalms 59:14.
