Bus Safety Award Winner Says "Drive as if Other Guy Crazy"

In 21 years of bus driving, covering 1,850,000 miles, Interstate Driver Haselwood never has had an accident.

Slogan Helps Veteran to Near 2,000,000-Mile No-Accident Mark

His own traffic safety slogan, "Drive like the other guy was crazy", supplementing his company's manual of safe driving rules, is the reason that Ernest R. "Pop" Haselwood has won the "Nation's Safest Bus Driver" award, he declares.

In 21 years of bus driving, the last eight of which have been with the Interstate Transit-Union Pacific Stages lines, which operates through this territory, Haselwood has covered more than 1,850,000 miles without causing the slightest accident.

He began his unusual career on his own one-man bus line in the Pacific Northwest in 1916.

The magazine, Bus Transportation, sponsored the contest, and awarded Haselwood a 17-jewel watch.

His work has won national recognition even before this contest, and his driving practices considered a model.

Haselwood's customary run is from Cheyenne, Wyo., where he lives, to North Platte, Neb., a distance of 219 miles. Forty-four years old, he intends to continue driving buses for a long time, and he is certain he can maintain his non-accident record by application of the principle he coined, "Drive like the other guy was crazy".
