MORNING GLORY RUST STUDIED

A rust fungus discovered by an Oregon State college professor 22 years ago and re-discovered by a southern Oregon farmer may prove the long-sought key to the control of wild morning glory, probably the most universal and destructive perennial weed in Oregon and many other states.

D. M. Lowe, a Jackson county farmer, has used the fungus on his own place last year and this, and reports completely eradicating morning glory from one field, so far as surface growth is concerned, at least, and says that leaves on the morning glory patch on which it was used this year are a solid mass of rust.

The existence of this condition has been confirmed by Dr. F. P. McWhorter, plant pathologist at the Oregon experiment station, who has visited the farm a number of times and has collected material for further scientific tests being made by the experiment station in the course of its weed eradication studies.

The story of the finding of the fungus, told by Mr. Lowe, is that 22 years ago H. S. Jackson, at that time professor of botany and plant pathology at Oregon State college and now on the staff of the University of Toronto, came to southern Oregon on a combined fishing and fungus collecting trip. Lowe and Professor Jackson were together when the latter found a wild morning glory plant infected with rust. He gathered some for his own collection, and suggested to Lowe that he might try it on his farm. Lowe says he did, and cleaned up all the morning glories on his place at that time.

Recently a different farm owned by him became infested with morning glories, and he remembered his former experience. Through careful search of the original territory he found some of the same rust, with the results just mentioned.

Dr. McWhorter emphasizes the fact that the experiment station has no material to distribute and does not know yet whether this rust is particularly virulent on the wild morning glory common to southern Oregon, or if it is equally effective on those growing in other parts of the state. These are questions which will be settled just as soon as greenhouses and field tests can be carried out.

So far as observed, the rust has no other host plant.

OREGON MEN ASSIST AAA

Three Oregon men are in Washington, D. C., assisting in the detailed formulation of the 1938 agricultural conservation program. Two of these are N. E. Dodd, Haines, president, and N. C. Donaldson, Corvallis, secretary of the State AAA committee. Both have taken part in such conferences previously and are fully familiar with the procedure.

The third Oregon representative is P. M. Brandt, head of the animal industries division in the school of agriculture at Oregon State college, who is representing the extension service. He was selected as the representative from here because he is familiar with the past operations and future needs under the range improvement program of the AAA, according to F. L. Ballard, vice-director of the extension service.

Farmer delegates to the state conferences earlier this summer were unanimous in urging certain modifications of the range program to make it more workable. From Brandt's familiarity with range conditions it is hoped that some such adjustments may be included in the new program.

Columbia Grange Meeting.

The Columbia Grange will hold a special open meeting some time during the latter part of October at which time a special program will be presented. The public will be invited to attend.

Farm Bureau Auxiliary Meeting.

The Farm Bureau Auxiliary will meet Friday, September 17th, at the club house in Columbia district with the following committee in charge: Mesdames F. Guivits, Harry Connor, H. E. Dunning, H. J. Ott and Chas. Lynch. All members and friends are requested to be present.

CO-OP EXECUTIVE TO TOUR U. S.

(Co-op League News Service) New York—Anders Hedberg, Secretary for International Questions of the Cooperative Union of Sweden, will arrive in New York, September 28 for a two-month tour of U. S. co-operatives, according to an announcement made today by The Co-operative League.

Mr. Hedberg, who refers to himself as "international errand boy" for the Swedish Kooperativa Forbundet, is a director of and helped organize the Scandinavian Luma Society, the international cooperative for the manufacture of electric light bulbs, with factories in Stockholm and Oslo. He is also a director of the British Luma Society which is now building a cooperative lamp factory in Glasgow. In addition he is a member of the Central Board of the International Cooperative Alliance and author of nine books and pamphlets about the cooperatives in the Scandinavian countries. "Cooperation in Sweden", his latest pamphlet, is being translated into English for distribution here during his lecture tour.

Mr. Hedberg's tour of American co-ops will take him as far west as Minneapolis and Kansas City.

MODEL TOWN TO BE CO-OPERATIVE

(Co-op League News Service) Washington, D. C. — America's first "model town" will be run with out profit.

Greenbelt, Maryland, will swing into operation with its equivalent of a Main Street lined with cooperatives. Members of the community will elect members of the board of directors of Greenbelt Consumer Services and the community co-op will manage a cooperative general store, a self-service food and meat market, co-op drug store, motion picture theatre, barber shop, beauty shop, garage and service station and any other services that the community of 900 families needs.

Greenbelt is the first of three planned communities now being built by the Farm Security Administration (formerly Resettlement Administration) to provide housing accommodations for people of moderate incomes.

As it will be necessary to have stores in operation when the citizens of Greenbelt move into their new homes, the Consumer Distribution Corporation which was organized a year ago by Edward A. Filene has been asked to make the necessary arrangements for the management and operation of the enterprises.

CDC is a non-profit organization created to assist in the organization of a chain of cooperative department stores. It will provide the necessary capital for the operation of the businesses until such time as the citizens of the community are prepared to operate their own enterprises.

The stores will be run without subsidy from the government; a percentage of the gross sales will be paid to the government as rent for the properties; goods will be sold to members at market prices and all savings (profits) will be returned to the consumers, building up capital until the members have acquired complete ownership of the enterprises. Flint Garrison, executive vice-president of CDC, will be in charge of the Greenbelt development, with Herbert Evans, vice-president, acting treasurer.

POTATO CONTROL SOUGHT FOR 1938

A voluntary control program designed to limit commercial potato acreage next year is contemplated for the 1938 agricultural conservation program, if approved by growers in the leading commercial districts, according to reports received from Washington, D. C. The plan is to have growers in the commercial districts vote on the question some time in September, so that the details may be worked out in plenty of time before the planting season for next year's crop.

The idea is to assign quotas representing a fair share of the national acreage to those who voluntarily cooperate and to provide benefit payments for those who do not exceed their quotas. The tentative plan calls for the program to apply only to commercial producers in commercial potato areas. No definite plans have yet been announced as to when the vote will be taken in Oregon producing areas.

CO-OPERATIVE MONTH OBSERVED

(Co-op League News Service) New York—"Cooperative Month", long observed by cooperators in the Lake Superior area when renewed activities brought hundreds of new members into local co-ops in October, will be observed by all major cooperatives this fall.

Reports from several cooperative centers indicate the growing importance of the event. Cooperatives affiliated with Central Cooperative Wholesale, Superior, will open new member campaigns in Minn., Wisc., and Northern Mich. Midland Cooperative Wholesale, Minneapolis, will issue a special Cooperative Month edition of the Midland Cooperator, October 1, and is arranging a series of cooperative meetings and rallies throughout its territory. National Cooperatives, Chicago, is assisting affiliated co-ops with display material.

The Cooperative League of the U.S.A. has suggested that all member organizations extend the observation of "Cooperative Month" by arranging special displays in co-ops, holding educational meetings, and making special membership drives.
