TURKEYS AGAIN JANUARY 5TH

The Eastern Oregon Turkey Grow-turkey pool on January 5 for one day only. Cards are being sent to growers in the territory to estimate the number of birds to be shipped and if enough interest is indicated another shipment will follow later.

JAN. 15 WORK SHEET CLOSING DATE

A closing date for filing work sheets under the 1938 Agricultural Conservation program in Oregon and specifications for practices under the range improvement program were decided upon by the state AAA committee at its recent meeting at Oregon State college, reports N. E. Dodd, Haines, chairman.

January 15 will be the deadline set for receiving additional work-sheets, the committee decided County committees have been receiving these work sheets for the past month from those who have not participated in either of the previous programs. All who have turned in those worksheets previously are automatically included for next year.

Specifications for the range building practices have been sent to Washington for final approval before being forwarded to the counties. It is understood they follow in a general way the previous practices, with such changes as are necessary to conform to some new national regulations.

The extent to which Oregon livestock men have benefited under the range program is indicated by statistical summaries in the state office showing work done under the first brief 1936 program and the recent 1937 program, summaries of which are still incomplete.

R. G. Johnson, range specialist of the state college staff credits the range program of the AAA with bringing the greatest single advancement in range rehabilitation work. In the 1936 program there were 1179 cooperators owning more than three and one-half million acres of range land. This year estimates are six and one-half million acres.

"Cooperators are not paid the total cost of beneficial improvements," Johnson points out, "but are sufficient to encourage owners to contribute the balance." Figures from the U. S. Forest service show that it costs about $130 to clean out and box a spring, with troughs and pipe. The AAA paid $50 per spring last year and a total of 1641 were developed.

"The value of these improvements from a national long-time standpoint is the reason for government aid in such conservation efforts."

CO-OP COLLEGE OPENS SECOND TERM

NEW YORK — The Cooperative College, established in the fall of 1937 as a training school for prospective cooperative executives and educational directors, will open its second term February 15, according to Dr. James P. Warbasse, president of the college.

The spring term will last for five months. Three months will be devoted to academic work at the headquarters of the Co-op College, 167 W. 12th Street, New York. The following two months will be devoted to field work in cooperatives in various sections of the country. The faculty of the college will be comprised of professors from New York colleges and universities, technical experts in fields of administration and education and cooperative leaders drawn in for special lectures. During the first term of the college 35 educators and co-op leaders addressed the student body.

The academic sessions of the first term have been completed and students are now working in cooperative associations as "laboratory work in cooperation."

MRS. ROOSEVELT VISITS CO-OP LEAGUE

NEW YORK—"For a country that is a new country we take new ideas very slowly," declared Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt at the end of an hour and a half interview with cooperative executives at the office of The Cooperative League of the U.S.A. Mrs. Roosevelt dropped in at the office of The Cooperative League Saturday morning, December 18, to learn about the progress of the consumers cooperative movement in this country. She expressed her own interest and added, "The President is also interested in the consumers cooperative movement and wants to know what is being done."

Mrs. Roosevelt watched intently while E. R. Bowen, general secretary, sketched on an outline map of the United States the locations and fields of business of America's major wholesale cooperatives, and then discussed with Dr. James P. Warbasse, president of The League, the program and development of cooperative medicine.

"If we are going to have adequate medical care for all the people the cooperatives provide an effective way," Mrs. Roosevelt observed.

The Swedish cooperatives, which have pioneered in the field of modern housing for low income groups, have set an example for American housing in which Mrs. Roosevelt was particularly interested.

Just before the interview Mrs. Roosevelt had received news of the defeat of the Wages and Hours bill. She pointed out that the defeat of the bill was additional evidence of the failure of farm and labor to realize their common interest. "It is my hope," she said, "that eventually farm and labor can be brought together. It seems to me that the consumers cooperative movement is one of the ways this may be done."

Mrs. Roosevelt said that she had previously discussed the report of the Inquiry on Cooperative Enterprise in Europe with members of the commission and was extremely anxious to find out what progress had been made in the U.S.A.

Westland Grange Dance.

The Westland Grange will sponsor another dance Saturday night, January 1st, in the Westland school house. Music by Bert Michell and his orchestra. The public is invited to attend. Admission will be 40 cents and 10 cents.

FOOD CEREAL POINTERS GIVEN

Cereal grains and products made from them are high in energy value and certain vitamins and minerals, unless much of their food value is "manufactured" out of them," says Miss Lucy A. Case, extension specialist in nutrition at Oregon State college.

The germ of cereals, highly valuable for its vitamin content, is often removed by the manufacturers because it contains oil and is subject to rancidity. Manufacturers of the wheat products are allowed to remove the germ and still label their product "whole wheat," Miss Case says. Because real whole grain cereals from which the germ has not been removed do deteriorate rapidly, however, it is best to buy these only in small quantities, she says.

"In making many cereals, part or all of the bran coat is removed, thus lowering the mineral and roughage content," says Miss Case. Cereals from which most of the coat and germ have been removed are called "refined cereals." Cereals from which only a part of the coat and only a part or none of the coat and germ have been removed are commonly called "whole grain" cereals. As with other manufactured goods, it is difficult to ascertain the real facts concerning the food content of any particular manufactured cereal product.

Such cereals as rolled oats, corn meal and cracked wheat can be purchased in large quantities in cloth sacks at a considerable saving, if dry storage, free from dust, can be provided for them. It is necessary, however, for the buyer to be on guard against off-flavors in foods in cloth bags.

Ready-to-serve cereals save the homemaker's time, but cereals cooked at home are cheaper, often costing only one-tenth as much. Miss Case says. If well-cooked adequate time, cooked cereal is as wholesome and usually as delicious as the ready-to-serve kinds and has the advantage of being a warm food.

TOO FEW CAN AFFORD MEDICAL CARE BROADCAST

NEW YORK—"The trouble with medicine is not the fact that there are too many physicians but that there are too few patients able to pay for adequate medical care," declared Dr. Kingsley Roberts, Medical Director of the Bureau of Cooperative Medicine, speaking on "What System of Medical Care Should We Have?" over a nationwide broadcast of "America's Town Meeting of the Air," Thursday, December 23. "Cooperative health associations provide individuals in both rural and urban areas with an opportunity to organize to provide themselves with adequate medical care."

The Town Meeting heard the case for three types of medical care. Dr. Arthur C. Christie, president of the Medical Society of Washington, D. C., defended Individual Medicine as now practiced. Dr. G. W. Haigh, member of the Worcester, Mass. Medical Society and author of the first bill to found State-wide Medical Service presented the case for Socialized Medicine. Dr. Roberts spoke for Cooperative Medicine.

In describing cooperative health associations, Dr. Roberts pointed out, "A principle of cooperative medicine is cooperative control. This is the right of the individual to determine what he is paying for, and how he is paying for it. Cooperative control gives the individual the opportunity to select the man who is to conduct the affairs of his organization, its business policies. Of course this applies only to the fiscal administrative functions of cooperative health associations and not to the practice of medicine.

"The cooperatives cannot expect to get good medical care cheap but they can materially increase the purchasing power of the medical dollar. Preventive medicine will assure this by reducing the incidence and severity of disease. . . . We doctors want cooperative medicine because it will increase the demand for medical service."
