In 1938 many people will be imitating their friends and neighbors by going in for one of the new developments of the Frigidaire laboratory... at Dayton, which this year reaches a seasonally new low figure in operating costs. Above is one of the new model Frigidaire's which incorporate every worthwhile feature known to the refrigeration business, including Frigidaire's patented silent meter-mixer, and the double-easy ice cube release. The motorlog car at the west end of Grand Coulee dam

Inspecting the majestic grandeur of Dry Falls

The Coulee dam has brought more than 300,000 visitors to the sage-carpeted canyon walls of the Columbia last year, to gasp at this greatest product of the new deal's spending prowess. In one 24-hour period tourists from Hawaii, Africa, Manchuria and Nova Scotia were registered among the thousands of Americans and Canadians.
 Inspecting the majestic grandeur of Dry Falls over which once poured a cataract 80 times the size of Niagara. Below it the 20-mile-long lower Grand Coulee, a prodigious chasm of indescribable beauty. There's the Gingko petrified forest, graveyard of the sacred oriental gingko tree, turned to imperishable stone 30,000,000 years ago.
 The above scenes are published through the cooperation of The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor association in presenting a series of motorlogs designed to stimulate travel in the Pacific northwest.
