WESTLAND GRANGE HOBO CONCLAVE

Come to the big Hobo Conclave at our next regular meeting, June 23. Wear your old clothes or be prepared to pay a fine. A short business meeting will be held in the Odd Fellows hall followed by a weiner roast out of doors.

Visiting grangers are always welcome. Everyone bring weiners and buns. Games and music, fun and eats. Don't miss it.

OSC SCHOOL OF FORESTRY GETS HIGH GRADE RATING

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—The school of forestry here has been included among five out of 20 schools in the entire United States to be given a rank of 100 per cent in the showing its graduates made in 1937 in taking civil service examinations for junior forester. Others achieving the rank are Harvard and Yale which take graduate forestry students only, University of Michigan and University of Montana. The 26 OSC graduates who took the examination made an average grade second only to that of the graduates of Michigan, among undergraduate schools.

In total enrollment in forestry schools OSC ranks second only to the New York State college of Forestry which reported 502 compared with 488 here when the figures were gathered last fall by The Journal of Forestry, and a cumulative total for the year of 555 at OSC.

COOPERATORS FROM FOUR STATES PAY TRIBUTE TO COOPERATIVE LEADER

(Co-op League News Service) Virginia, Minn. — Cooperative leaders from four states and hundreds of friends and business associates gathered here last week to honor H. V. Nurni, general manager of Central Cooperative Wholesale who died in Superior, May 26. Mr. Nurni had been associated with C.C.W. since 1922 and was made general manager of the company in 1931. He was for many years a director of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. and was a director of National Cooperatives, Inc. at the time of his death.

The Cooperative Builder said in commenting on his death, "The cooperative movement will long profit by the sound and constructive policies for which he stood."

CO-OP INSTITUTE FEATURES FRUIT, VEGETABLE ITEMS

Fruit and vegetable growers of Oregon will find many special conferences related to their business at the fourteenth annual meeting of the American Institute of Cooperation at Pullman and Moscow, July 11 to 15, according to Paul Carpenter, extension specialist in cooperative marketing at Oregon State college. OSC is joining with Washington State college and the University of Idaho in serving as joint hosts to the convention, which is open to the general public.

Eight conferences have been arranged particularly for the fruit and vegetable people. Among the problems to be discussed will be competitive changes in market outlets affecting Pacific northwest tree fruits; cooperative sales promotion and international trade; credit and transportation problems of fruit and vegetable cooperatives; trends in consumption and a discussion of the problems surrounding the rapidly expanding frozen pack industry.

The place of federal and state control of shipments as a means of dealing with surpluses is on the program for discussion, as are the possibilities and problems of fruit grower supply purchasing.

Of particular interest to Oregon nut growers will be a special conference dealing with, among other items, the operation of the federal walnut marketing agreement, widening market outlets for filberts, and a proposed national advertising plan for filberts.

CROP INSURANCE SOON READY FOR OREGON GROWERS

Government wheat crop insurance applications will soon be available in all counties where wheat growing is part of the farming program, announces Clyde Kiddle, state supervisor of government crop insurance, who is now maintaining offices in connection with the state AAA headquarters at Oregon State college.

A series of 16 county and district meetings to explain the details of the insurance program is being held throughout the state the last two weeks in June, after which the county AAA committees will be in a position to accept applications for insurance. In major wheat growing counties these meetings have been for the growers themselves, where detailed explanations of the program were given.

In western and some southern Oregon counties, only the county committeemen and county agents with their assistants attended the meetings, and these in turn will be in a position to pass information on to the growers.

All applications for insurance on the 1939 crop must be filed before seeding is done this fall. The national offices are now ready to receive applications and have recently announced receipt of the first one from a grower in Texas.

Potato Marketing Agreement.

Western Oregon potato growers will have opportunity to express their ideas concerning the proposed potato marketing agreement covering 17 states at a hearing at the Multnomah hotel in Portland June 22. This will be an adjourned meeting from the hearing at Redmond, June 17, and will serve not only western Oregon but western Washington growers as well.

County meetings throughout the state recently have served to inform the growers on some of the provisions of the proposed agreement. As a result, some western Oregon growers who market their products largely within the state, have expressed opinion that it would be better to exclude them from the interstate marketing agreement, while others feel that there would be some advantages in being included in the general 17-state marketing arrangement. Both sides may be fully heard at the Portland hearing, AAA officials point out.

NEW DIRECTORS ELECTED: COOPERATIVE BOOK CLUB PLANS TO EXTEND SERVICES

(Co-op League News Service) New York—The Cooperative Book Club, a mail-order co-op serving members in almost every state in the Union, reported rapidly growing membership and business volume at the end of its first six months of actual business operations, when members gathered here June 1 for the first annual meeting of the co-op.

Quincy Howe, treasurer, recommended that the cooperative build powerful reserves rather than refund large savings immediately and thereby increase its effectiveness in cutting the costs of book distribution.

Dr. Henry Pratt Fairchild, chairman of the Educational Committee, announced that fifty groups have joined the Cooperative Book club under its plan to sponsor book forums, reading circles, circulating libraries and cooperative book shops. Gerald McDonald of the New York Public Library reported that a committee of librarians is already working on a program for libraries to buy their books through the co-op.

The new board of directors, elected by a mail ballot of the entire membership, includes representatives of educational, labor, cooperative, religious organizations as well as several men with practical experience in the book business. They are: Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers of America; Harry Elber Barnes, author and lecturer; Alfred Bingham, editor of Common Sense; Winslow Carlton, Cooperative Health Ass'n of N.Y.; James D. Corsa, journalist; Henry Pratt Fairchild, N. Y. University; Marion Humble, librarian; Anton Haas, accountant; Benson Y. Landis, Federal Council of Churches; Anthony Lehner, Penna. Farm Bureau Co-op Ass'n; Harry Overstreet, College of the City of N.Y.; Selden Rodman, editor and poet; Coley B. Taylor, publisher and author; Stanley Walker, sales manager, and Colston Warner, Amherst College.

COOPERATIVE WOMEN'S GUILDS TO SPONSOR YOUTH WORK

(Co-op League News Service) Superior, Wisc.—The Cooperative Women's Guilds in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Northern Michigan will continue to sponsor children's summer camps and to assist cooperative youth work in these three states in addition to making an intensive drive to increase the number of cooperative women's groups in these states during the coming year.

This was the decision of 109 representatives of 46 local guilds meeting here for the 9th annual meeting of the Northern States Cooperative Women's Guild, May 21 and 22.

HEALTH CO-OPS DEMAND AMA DROP OBSTRUCTION TO MEDICAL PROGRESS

(Co-op League News Service)

San Francisco—A demand that the American Medical Association cease its "arbitrary interference with" and "obstruction and opposition" to the public's efforts to obtain better medical care through voluntary non-profit associations will be served by cooperative medical groups on the House of Delegates of the AMA assembling in San Francisco tomorrow in connection with the annual convention of the association.

Health groups in all parts of the country, serving and associated with church, farm, labor and cooperative organizations, have passed similar resolutions which will be submitted to the AMA for consideration at the convention.

"It has long been possible for Americans to insure against most of the risks that may befall us," the resolutions state, "except the cost of sickness. We have therefore organized as a non-profit cooperative body to purchase medical care and to arrange with physicians of our choice to provide it.

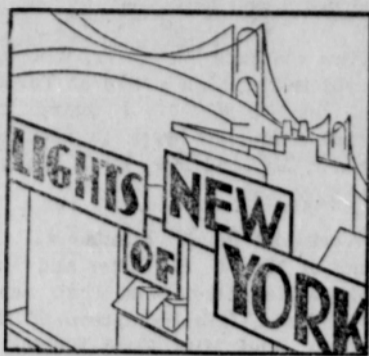

"Unfortunately, such efforts have been opposed by the American Medical Association. . . Physicians who would cooperate with us have been threatened or punished. . . As American citizens we protest against arbitrary interference with our plans for spending our own money to secure a necessity of life. We ask the American Medical Association and its state and county medical societies to cease opposition and obstruction, to meet us halfway, and to join with us," so that "self-supporting and self-respecting families can obtain, and pay for cooperatively, good medical and hospital care."

Dr. Kingsley Roberts, medical director of the Bureau of Cooperative Medicine, in making public the resolutions, declared that labor, farm and religious groups throughout the country are showing increasing interest in the development of cooperative medicine. He declared that with their support, voluntary health associations are springing up in all major cities, including San Francisco, Los Angeles, New York, Boston, Washington, and others. Rural groups under the sponsorship of the Farm Bureau Federations and the Farmers Union are rapidly developing similar programs.

Dr. Roberts said, "As a member of the AMA, I feel that if the public and the medical profession do not work hand in hand in this problem, there will be unfavorable reaction against organized medicine. I hope that the American Medical Association will accede to the request made by the voluntary medical groups who signed the statement for with such cooperation there is every prospect that the medical economic problems of the middle and lower income groups will be more quickly solved."

The resolution is signed by: Wage Earners' Health Ass'n, St. Louis, Mo.; Elk City Community Hospital, Elk City, Okla.; Cooperative Health Ass'n of N.Y., New York City; Group Health Ass'n, Washington, D.C.; Medical Ass'n of San Diego County, San Diego, Cal.; Milwaukee Medical Center, Milwaukee, Wisc.; Ann Arbor Cooperative Health Ass'n, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Cooperative Health Ass'n of Superior, Superior, Wisc.; Health Ass'n of Nassau County, Nassau County, N. Y.; Consumers Association, Inc., San Diego, Cal.; Columbus Consumers' Cooperative, Inc., Columbus, Ohio.

A machine for making macaroni has been acquired by North Dakota's Agricultural College Experiment Station, so that wheats best for macaroni can be tested.

City Life: After 10 p. m., those who would dance in the Trianon room of the Ambassador must wear formal attire. The other evening about 9, Phillips Lord showed up in a neat dark blue suit. Having dined, he desired to dance, but the formal hour had struck. That didn't stop him. After a conference, the head waiter turned his duties over to a captain and retired behind a screen with Lord. When Lord came out he was wearing the waiter's Tuxedo, tie and vest and was quite regulation except that the head waiter weighs about 220 pounds and Lord's tonnage is considerably less. Despite the room thus afforded, he drew applause from a number of spectators, including Mary Brian of the movies. The head waiter stayed behind the screen until Lord finished dancing. He didn't kick. The rent of his evening attire brought him $5 a evening.

Neighbors: An uptown family made vigorous complaint to the building superintendent because each morning at about 5 when they were doing their best sleeping, they were awakened by overhead noises which sounded as if the family upstairs were putting on a tumbling act or at least the Susie-Q in most violent form. The family upstairs maintained stoutly that at 5 a. m. they too were sleeping, so there could be no guilt on their part. Just when it looked as if one of those apartment house feuds was about to be born, the more or less distracted superintendent took a hand. At 5 a. m. he was on watch and, hearing the tumult, dashed upstairs and pushed the bell until he got response. The family had been asleep all right. So soundly asleep that they hadn't heard their fifty pound bulldog taking its morning exercise.

Hint: Speaking of dogs reminds me of Hugh Gray's Buddy, who was a big fellow mostly airald and, weighted with years, passed away some time ago and is now sleeping peacefully on the banks of the Aspetuck. When the Grays lived on Riverside drive, Buddy was an important member of the household. An entertainer in a way, he would sing whenever Ruth Gray played "Buddy." But he was set in his ways, and so when his bedtime came, about 10 p. m., if guests were present he would become uneasy and show unmistakably a desire to be taken out. If that had no effect, he would go up to each guest and opening his mouth, yawn prodigiously and noisily. And he'd keep that up until he got action.

Memories: Theater incidents I like to think about: All the scenes between Dudley Digges and Peter Holden as Gramps and Pud, in "On Borrowed Time" . . . Imogene Coca's burlesque of "Our Town" in "Who's Who" . . . Ed Wynn completely surrounded by dogs in "Hurray for What!" . . . The engine cab scenes in "Casey Jones" . . . The quiet, genial style of Frank Craven building word pictures in "Our Town" . . . Sir Cedric Hardwicke, the canon, carrying in Bridgid (Julie Hayden), the servant girl, after she had been stoned by a mob . . . Robert Speaight's reading of his lines in "Murder in the Cathedral" . . . Gertrude Lawrence's last scene (when she snaps a lead pencil) in "Susan and God" . . . George M. Cohan in "I'd Rather Be Right," saying to Robert Less, "Take a law, Cummings."

Names: Alan Kent, of WNEW, supplied me with this list of swing terms for various musical instruments: Violin, scratch box; piano, box or ivory case; accordion, squeeze box or push noise; saxophone, hook tube or pipe; trumpet, satchel; trombone, gobble horn or slush pump or smear tube; drums, suitcase or thunder skin; guitar, pork chops; bass viol, doghouse; tuba, grunt iron; clarinet, nightstick or squeeze; flute, whistle thing.

Risky: One of the local radio stations has a new amateur hour, performing pets—singing dogs, cats and mice. Parrots are barred. They sometimes use the wrong words at the wrong time.
