A MESSAGE TO EVERY MEMBER.

News of 4-H CLUBS

By Norma Getchell, Reporter.

The Blue Ribbon Cooking club met Wednesday, July 20, at the H. M. Sommerer home. A demonstration on eggs was given at the previous meeting, and at this meeting a demonstration on fruits was given. Those who were present were Lucille and Rachel Weeks, Ruth McCulley, Myra Getchell, Peggy Sommerer and Norma Getchell.

By Kay Keener, Reporter.

The regular meeting of the Columbia Stitches was held Friday, July 22, at the home of the leader, Anne Sommerer.

During the business meeting, plans were made for a party and scavenger hunt to be given Friday evening, July 22. The "So We Sew" 4-H Sewing club and their leader, Esther McMullen of Hermiston, will be our guests for the evening.

The next regular meeting will be held August 12 at the home of Kay and Dona Keener, when all members are requested to have as many articles completed as possible, as pictures for our annual reports and scrapbooks will be taken at that meeting.

At the close of the meeting refreshments were served by Lucille Weeks, and Norma and Myra Getchell.

Carload Presto-Logs Arrives.

For those interested in Presto-Logs, a carload is on the track at the Grange Co-operative warehouse at present.

WEEDS LIKENED TO BAD HABITS IN NEW BOOKLET

The perennial weed is likened to a bad habit, which seems harmless until it becomes so entrenched that getting rid of it is difficult. Continuing this analogy, Oregon cultivated land is made up of 1 1/2 per cent of bad habits, according to estimates in the latest and most comprehensive weed bulletin issued by the extension service at Oregon State college.

The new and profusely illustrated bulletin is not the last word on the control of perennial weeds in Oregon, but it is the latest printed word, and one which is likely to become a textbook on this subject until such time as weed control research provides better methods than are now known. The bulletin is credited to five authors, E. R. Jackman, extension agronomist, and his assistant, Lawrence Jenkins; C. A. Henderson, W. A. Holt and H. G. Avery, county agents in Klamath, Umatilla and Union counties respectively.

Supplementing the bulletin itself is a series of illustrated leaflets which describe 51 different weeds found in Oregon. "So far there is no royal way to weed control," the bulletin points out. "The weeds stubbornly refuse to abdicate unless stern and unrelenting methods are applied. These methods are expensive in either time, money, or both."

The bulletin discusses the various methods of chemical control now used, control by cultivation, by smothering, by pasturing, by seeding to permanent crops and various combinations of these control methods. Suggestions are made for a county weed control program, and digests are printed of both the Oregon weed and seed control laws.

In addition to the regular text, the bulletin contains scores of letters from growers, giving their actual experiences with different methods of weed control.

Irrigated Ladino Yields High.

ALBANY—The value of the irrigation-ladino clover combination in the dairyman is being proved again and again throughout the Willamette valley. County Agent F. C. Mullen of Albany reports that John Zimbrich of Lebanon pastured 15 cows all spring on five acres of ladino, and obtained six tons of clover for hay. Curtis Garner, Route 3, Corvallis, pastured 22 cows all spring on 8 acres of ladino, without feeding hay or silage, and E. A. Chambers of Albany is pasturing 10 cows on five acres with plenty of feed to spare.

AUTO USED TO HANDLE BUCK RAKE

Using an old automobile to handle a buck rake has been found to be highly satisfactory at the Union Experiment Station. In a letter written by D. E. Richards, superintendent of the station, to the Umatilla County Agent it was stated that this automobile buck rake is well suited to the job, handling as much hay as two good horse bucks on a close haul and three horse bucks on a longer haul.

The buck rake itself is without wheels, being attached to the front of the car in place of the bumper, a cross-beam being fastened under the running board. This particular machine cost around $60.00, plus the freight from Kansas, and according to Mr. Richards is affecting a substantial economy in hay making operations at the Union Station.

FARMERS PURCHASE ELECTRICAL GOODS

Farmers to whom REA loans are bringing electric power for the first time are quick to form new electrical habits, according to a survey published in the July issue of the Rural Electrification News. The survey, covering 46 REA-financed projects on which the average time of service per customer was only 8.4 months, indicates that within a very short time farmers learn to use electricity for far more than lights.

First, in the average farm family, a house-current radio is installed, bringing entertainment and more news of the world as well as of crop conditions. Next, the farm wife banishes the sad-iron in favor of a lighter electric iron which stays hot. Third, the wash-tub gives way to the washing machine. Then the electric refrigerator comes in. Electric toasters, water pumps, vacuum cleaners, hot plates, small motors, and poultry lighting equipment follow, in the order named, to make farm life more pleasant and profitable.

New electric lines, the survey reveals, provide big new markets for industry. The average farmer, during the first few months he has electricity, spends about $180 for appliances. This expenditure is in addition to the outlay for house wiring, which is anywhere from $50 to $300.

Small and inexpensive appliances sell rapidly on all projects throughout the country. Approximately 86 per cent of the new customers buy electric radios. An appreciable percentage of the customers also purchase more costly equipment; for example, 26 per cent, it is estimated, acquire electric refrigerators soon after obtaining electric service.

Hesslers Hold OSC Family Record.

Oregon State College—So far as is known by old timers here, Mr. and Mrs. George Hessler of Dayton hold the record for sending the most children through Oregon State college, all obtaining degrees. Lenora Hessler, who was a member of the 1938 graduating class, was the last of seven children to get their sheepskins here, all the six brothers and sisters being now in positions, including homemaking. Lenora finished with high honors, being one of the honor graduates in home economics and was chosen a member of Phi Kappa Phi, scholastic honor society.

SWEDISH COOPERATIVES ADD LINOLEUM TRUST TO STRING OF BROKEN MONOPOLIES

(Co-op League News Service) New York—"We broke the power of another trust the week before we sailed from Sweden," Albin Johansson, president of Kooperativa Forbundet, the Cooperative Wholesale and Union of Sweden, told reporters when they questioned him about the trust busting activities of the Swedish cooperatives on his arrival here last week.

Monopolies controlling the manufacture of rubber tires and galoshes, margarine, flour, pottery and electric light bulbs have been broken by the Swedish cooperatives which started the manufacture of these products in order to force down exorbitant prices charged Swedish consumers.

"We recently threatened to build a factory to produce our own linoleum because the linoleum cartel was holding prices at unreasonable levels. When the trust found out we meant business they dropped prices 15 per cent. As a result the cooperatives have saved money for all Swedish consumers.

"Prices of linoleum in your country are even higher than they were in Sweden before we broke the monopoly," Mr. Johansson told American reporters.

Axel Gjores, educational director of the Cooperative Union of Sweden, explained that although the Swedish government passed a law many years ago to investigate monopolies, "for all practical purposes there is no government regulation of monopoly. The Swedish people look to the cooperatives for the solution of the monopoly question.

"We save the Swedish people $2,500,000 a year on the cost of electric lamps alone," Mr. Gjores pointed out. "The total savings to consumers resulting from trust-busting by the co-ops is easily $25,000,000 a year."

The Swedish cooperative leaders sketched the growth of the cooperatives from their humble beginning 40 years ago to the "most important distributive business in Sweden." The cooperatives now have 600,000 members who represent one-third of the families in Sweden. In Stockholm alone there are 400 cooperative stores, 80,000 co-op members and a business of 60,000,000 kroner a year. The cooperatives do 10 per cent of all the business in Sweden and about 20 per cent in many lines.

"The Swedish cooperative movement helps stabilize unemployment by lowering prices, increasing purchasing power and stimulating production," Mr. Johansson said. "The co-ops have become an important factor in eliminating the great fluctuations of the business cycle in addition to reducing unemployment."

Asked if the American co-ops can break the trusts in this country, Mr. Johansson said it would take time. "We have been working at it forty years. Perhaps you can do it faster. The Swedish cooperatives were able to break monopolies by reason of their strength, attained through slow development on these fundamental principles: (1) members should own and control their own business; (2) they should build a sound financial structure, and (3) constantly educate members, employees and the general public in the purposes and methods of cooperation."

Mr. Johansson pointed out that the cooperatives helped private business by increasing the buying power of all the people. The farmers have gained greatly through the growth of the cooperatives because they have eliminated excessive profits to middlemen on the goods the farmers produce and have cut the costs of the goods the farmers buy.

Mr. Johansson and Mr. Gjores are members of the official Swedish delegation now in this country celebrating the Tercentenary of the Founding of the New Sweden at Wilmington, Delaware. Mr. Johansson spoke over a nation-wide hook up of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Monday evening, July 11, and Mr. Gjores and Mr. Johansson were guests of honor at a dinner given by the Cooperative Coordinating committee of Greater New York, which represents 80 cooperative stores, cafeterias and other cooperative enterprises in the metropolitan area.
