News of 4-H CLUBS

By KAY KEENER

Closing a very profitable and pleasant 4-H club year the Columbia Stitches held their final meeting at the home of Susan and Dorothy Knox, Friday afternoon, August 26. All members were present and Rachel Weeks and Clemmie Barber visited the club.

Pictures were taken of second and third year members in their completed costumes, and of first year girls with their articles. Record books were checked and scores made. After the business meeting an amateur hour was presented. Later refreshments were served by the hostess Susan Knox and Mary Sommerer.

The girls are anxiously awaiting the Umatilla Project fair to display exhibits before making plans for another year.

MINERS LAUNCH FIRST COOPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECT IN CANADA

(Co-op League News Service)
Tomkinsville, Nova Scotia—While hundreds of townspeople and eighty visitors from eleven states and four Canadian provinces looked on, Angus L. MacDonald, Premier of Nova Scotia, dedicated the first cooperative housing project in Canada here, August 13.

With one house completed and foundations laid for ten more, miners in industrial Nova Scotia are building modern houses for themselves cooperatively with a cash investment of $100 each and monthly payments of $12. The houses which are valued at $2500 contrast sharply with the dingy company houses prevalent in this coal mining town.

"The effort being made here will have its effect upon other sections of the province," declared Premier MacDonald. "This cooperative housing project is one phase of a movement toward broader horizons, toward greater intellectual development and toward greater economic security."

The Arnold Housing Cooperative, named after Mary E. Arnold, former manager of Consumers Cooperative Services, New York, who is advisor to the group, is the first project under the Nova Scotia housing law providing long term loans to cooperatives. Ten similar projects are in various stages of development.

UNUSUAL SEASON BRINGS PROBLEMS IN FALL SEEDING

The hot, dry summer in western Oregon has disrupted many established cropping plans, making necessary readjustments this fall, and in eastern Oregon the prevalence of trashy fallow is bringing some new seeding problems, points out Dr. D. D. Hill, associate agronomist at the Oregon experiment station, in a recent broadcast over KOAC.

Most winter and spring seedlings of red clover failed in the valley this year, except where irrigation was available. In many cases the logical legume to plant on fields where red clover died out is Austrian winter peas, especially where a cash crop is wanted, says Dr. Hill. Where a hay crop is desired, common vetch offers the best possibility, although vetch used for hay does not serve as a soil building legume in the rotation.

Fall-sown barley could fill a more important place in western Oregon now that a more satisfactory variety has been developed, believes Dr. Hill. Last fall the experiment station distributed a limited amount of seed of a new variety, Santiam. It is sufficiently winter hardy for western Oregon, and has proved highly productive on most soils. A small amount of seed is available in most valley counties, in addition to a limited supply available from the experiment station.

An important factor in the handling of trashy summer fallow is the necessity of weed control, experience has shown. Where the fall is dry and it is not possible to kill weeds before seeding, it is highly important to get the wheat started quickly. This is done sometimes by planting deeply enough with a single disc drill to get the seed down to moisture so that it will germinate promptly before the weeds sprout in the surface layer.

If the wheat cannot be planted down to moisture, Hill believes it is best to wait until fall rains germinate the weed seeds, so that the first crop of weeds may be killed. In some cases, it is even desirable to leave a field for spring planting if other methods of weed control cannot be followed.

WAY CLEARED FOR WHEAT LOANS TO OREGON FARMERS

With the settlement of procedure angles between the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Pacific Northwest wheat warehouses, the way is now cleared for Oregon and other northwest farmers to obtain AAA loans on this year's wheat crop whether they have farm storage facilities or not.

This announcement is made by Edgar L. Ludwick, recently appointed state supervisor of wheat loans in Oregon, who reports practically all federally licensed warehouses in Oregon as well as important state licensed facilities on the approved list.

Difficulty arose over the fact that national regulations on storage of wheat covered by loans were not in line with established practices in the northwest. Some adjustment in the requirements as well as in the practices has eliminated what for a while threatened the progress of the loan program in this region.

The procedure in obtaining loans is for the grower to make application through his county AAA committee. In case of public storage of his wheat, the chief step is obtaining clearance on AAA compliance. Where farm storage is being used the wheat must be stored 30 days and the storage facilities must be passed upon by the county committee before the loan can be approved.

Interest in farm storage is heightened by the fact that the government will pay 7 cents a bushel for storage on the farm in case the grain is turned over next spring as settlement of the loan. This would pay a considerable share of the cost of new farm storage, it is pointed out.

State Supervisor Ludwick is maintaining headquarters at the AAA office at Oregon State college. He has had long experience both in grain and wool handling in the northwest. After serving as county agent three years in Idaho he did special grain work for the U.S.D.A., then was assistant manager for the Oregon Grain Growers cooperative, and following that was sales manager for the Colorado Grain Growers. For the past 12 years he was assistant manager of the North Pacific Cooperative Woolgrowers in Portland.

181 AMERICAN RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATION LEADERS TOUR NOVA SCOTIA COOPERATIVES

(Co-op League News Service)
Antigonish, Nova Scotia — One hundred and eighty-one college professors, public school superintendents, teachers, Catholic priests, Protestant ministers and cooperative educational directors from 27 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and four provinces of Canada, using the campus of St. Francis Xavier University here as headquarters, have spent the last three weeks studying the Nova Scotia cooperatives.

Two sections of the 1938 Tour of Nova Scotia Cooperatives met here August 7 for a two-day conference and then spent six days visiting co-ops in Eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island. The third and fourth sections held their preliminary conference August 19 and 20 and will complete their tour of investigation August 27.

All of the tour parties took part in the Rural and Industrial Conference here August 16, 17 and 18 which drew together 1900 representatives of credit unions, cooperatives and study clubs in the Maritime provinces.

Leaders in the adult education and cooperative program sponsored by the Extension Department of St. Francis Xavier University which has attracted world wide attention reported that 142 credit unions, 42 cooperative stores, 17 cooperative lobster canneries, 11 cooperative fish processing plants and 7 other cooperatives have been organized in the province as a result of the program. Inspired by the work in Nova Scotia, other sections of eastern Canada have launched similar programs and representatives from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland reported the year's progress.

The Right Rev. James Morrison, Bishop of Antigonish, declared in opening the conference that where communism was rampant in eastern Nova Scotia a few years ago, the development of cooperatives and adult education has given the people better economic conditions and renewed hope and as a result "Communism in our province is as dead as Caesar's ghost!"

The tour parties visited cooperative stores, cooperative lobster canneries and fish processing plants, credit unions, cooperative handicraft associations, and marketing cooperatives in Larry's River, Port Felix, Canso and Little Dover on the mainland; and Judique, Port Hood, Mabou, Grant Etang, Sydney Mines, Baddock, Sydney, New Waterford, Glace Bay, Reserve Mines, L'Ardoise, Louisdale, West Arichat and Petit deGrat in Cape Breton Island.

A high point in the tour was the dedication of the Arnold Cooperative Housing development under construction by a group of miners at Tompkinsville, Reserve Mines, Nova Scotia, at which Premier Angus L. MacDonald of Nova Scotia and other high government officials participated.

Tour members reported that farmers, miners and fishermen who were completely destitute a few years ago are now on the way to economic self-sufficiency; that they have regained ownership of property and independence which had been taken away from them by the old order; and that through mutual self-help they have found ways to raise their standard of living to double and triple what it was. In the village of Louisdale, for example, 65 of the 92 families in the community were on relief three years ago. Today no one is on relief and the members of the community own their own co-op store, co-op credit union and co-op pulp wood association.

An international broadcast from the conference, carried by the Canadian Broadcasting System and the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Company, told the story of the adult education and cooperative program of the "Antigonish" movement. Rev. J. J. Tompkins, father of the movement; Kenneth Leslie, poet and journalist; Miss Ida Galant, member of the extension staff; and Rev. J. Henry Carpenter, chairman of the committee on the church and cooperatives of the Federal Council of Churches, were the speakers.

The leaders of the tours, which were under the joint auspices of the Cooperative League and St. Francis Xavier University, included: Rev. James Myers, Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches; Wallace J. Campbell, assistant secretary, the Cooperative League; Mabel Carney, Teachers College; Rev. L. J. Ligutti, president, National Catholic Rural Life Conf.; and Rev. Hartley J. Hartman, president, Brooklyn Church and Missions Federation. Rev. J. Henry Carpenter was director of the tours.

THAT THOSE WHO WORK MAY EAT

During the last few years we have faced the spectre of rising prices eating away the wage increases we have gained by intensive organization.

As early as 1917 the American Federation of Labor declared: "We hold that it is just as essential that a workman should get ten dollars worth of actual value for his wages when he spends them, as it is that he should get the ten dollars that he is entitled to for the labor he performs." (For money is valuable only as it provides a man and his family with food, clothing, shelter and the comforts of life.)

By organizing as producers in trade unions we have protected our jobs and raised our pay. Through bitter experience we are learning that if prices are jacked up when wages rise we get no more for our work.

By organizing as consumers in co-operatives we protect the buying power of our pay envelopes and begin recovering the ownership of the means of production and distribution which have slipped out of our hands.

In 1844 twenty-eight poverty stricken weavers in Rochdale, England, opened the first consumers cooperative store. In the ninety-four years that have passed almost a hundred million working men and women have become members of similar cooperatives. Today they own their own stores, wholesales and factories. They operate the biggest businesses in England, Sweden and Finland. They handle hundreds of millions of dollars worth of goods a year.

In the U. S. the consumers co-ops have had their greatest growth in farming areas, but today there is a great groundswell of interest in the ranks of organized labor. Co-ops are run by workmen in Dillonvale, Akron and Cleveland, O.; Racine and Kenosha, Wisc.; Minneapolis; Denver; Detroit; New York, and a score of other industrial centers.
