National World day of prayer will be held in the church basement February 24.

A Missionary reading contest is to be started Sunday evening, February 12. Mrs. George Corwin is leading the meeting. Everyone is invited to come.

Frank Walker and son, Milo went to Pasco, Wn., Tuesday to visit Mr. Walker's daughter, Mrs. Mack Watkins and also get Mr. Walker's car which has been in the repair shop for some time.

The farmers held an interesting meeting in the school gym Thursday evening. H. K. Dean of the Umatilla Field station at Hermiston, spoke on dairy production. This meeting is one of a series of farmers' meetings. Possibilities of a co-op grain and gas station were discussed. An expert on soil conservation will speak at the next meeting, Thursday the 9th of February.

O. S. C. MILK BARN PLANS READY FOR OREGON DAIRYMEN

Plans for constructing modern milk barns are available from the agricultural engineering department at Oregon State college. The plans were drawn by H. R. Sinnard, architect in the agricultural engineering department, based on research of the dairy barn requirements of Coos and Curry counties, and after consultation with state dairy inspectors and members of the dairy department at the college.

Two sets of plans are available, one for a barn 18 by 42 and an attached milk house 18 by 20. The second set is 34 by 42, providing stanchion space for 20 or 24 cows, with an attached milk house 18 by 20.

In Heavy Plowing

Sometimes the question comes up among farmers who have not been familiar with the operation of John Deere tractors as to the wear of the motor in burning stove oil. The construction of the cylinder head and our fuel vaporizing system makes the burning of stove oil possible, without any oil dilution. We as dealers, and we are backed up by the John Deere engineers, guarantee the motor to wear no more burning stove oil than it would on gasoline. John Deere engineers claim even less wear.

If you want to see this tractor perform on your type of work, ask us for a demonstration.

ing. Mrs. Omar Halverson and Mrs. Mildred Scott of Silverton, Oregon, visited at the home of Mrs. Halverson's nephew and family, Mr. and Mrs. James Walsh and family Tuesday. Mr. Halverson, chief of police of Silverton, and Mr. Scott drove this far with the ladies, going on to Pendleton on business.

This state has more people over 54 years of age in proportion to its population than any other state except Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. At the same time, it has fewer young people, proportionately, than any other state except California and Nevada.

The report, "Oregon Looks Ahead" is crammed with facts and figures on Oregon, gleaned from the scores of informative reports issued by the planning board during the past four years. It was edited by V. B. Stanbery, executive secretary of the board.

No inferences regarding the town- send or any other movement are drawn in the report, but it would only be natural for any project of interest to older people to arouse attention here, those who have read the volume points out.

Oregon also has the lowest birth rate of all states, the report says. In 1936 the natural increase per 1000 dropped to 1.5 percent while the birth rate was 14.1 persons per 1000, compared to that of New Mexico of 27.1 per 1000.

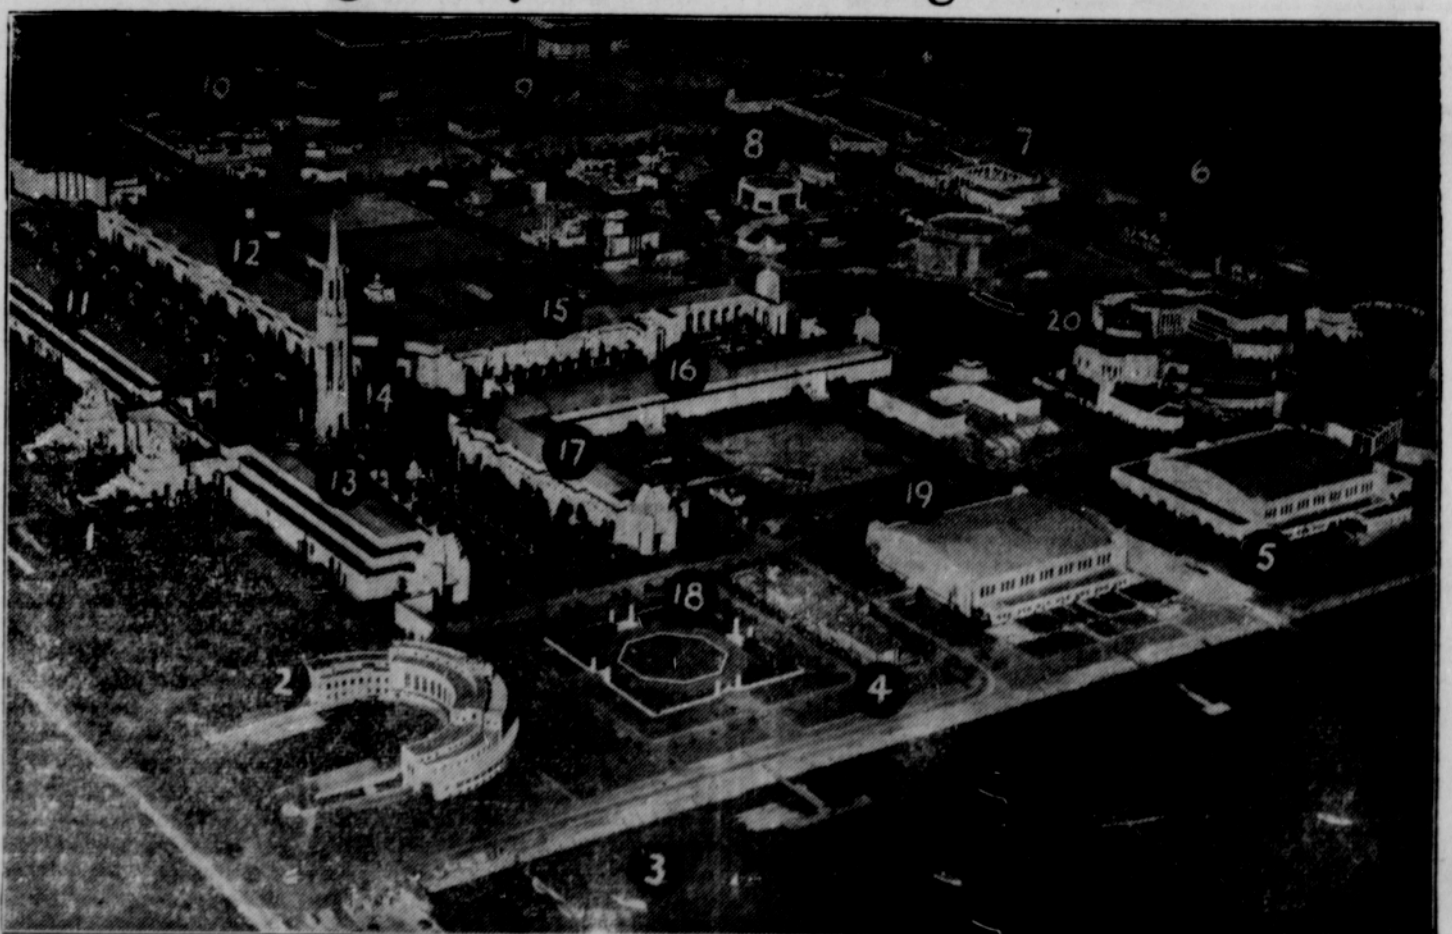

The low birth rate need occasion no special worry to Oregonians, the report points out. Health conditions are unusually good in this state, which means that a larger proportion of children will survive, and also will live longer lives. Migration into the state will also take care of any needed increase in population.
