FACTS ON FEEDING LAYING HENS

Feed represents the largest item of cost in the business of producing eggs, and as a relatively small profit per dozen is made even by efficient operators, the proper selection of feed for laying hens is of utmost importance if egg production is to be kept a paying business.

These facts are pointed out by H. E. Cosby, head of the poultry husbandry department at Oregon State college in the introduction to a new extension bulletin just issued, entitled "Feeding Laying Hens."

The importance of feed in relation to egg quality is also pointed out in the bulletin, which shows that careless uses of certain feeds and other faulty management practices have objectionable effects on interior egg quality.

"Oregon for more than two decades has been producing a surplus of eggs that must compete on a specified quality basis at distant terminal markets with eggs from other sections of the country," Cosby points out. "The price per dozen is determined by the quality of eggs at the eastern markets to which Oregon eggs are shipped."

This bulletin, No. 526, discusses feed nutrients, feed formulas for different purposes, analysis and vitamin content of various feeds, and different feeding methods for differing circumstances. There are also sections on housing range pullets, feeding breeding hens for reproduction, and handling hens in individual cages.

Shaws Invade Wheat Fields

Four sons of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Shaw of Hermiston are working in the wheat harvest in the Lexington area. Included in the small army are Lee, Asa, Vester and Carl. No report has been forthcoming as to how they are standing the heat.

JUNE REPORT OF UMATILLA-MORROW DAIRY ASSOCIATION

The average production of the 20 herds on test during the month of June was 641.8 lbs. of milk and 28.04 lbs. of fat. The high herd in the over-20-cow group was owned by Dell Christley, whose herd averaged 768.6 of milk and 34.65 of fat. In the 12-20 cow group the Happy Thot Jersey Farm, producing 815.4 of milk and 39.21 of fat; and in the under-12-cow group Chas. Lynch had the high herd of 10 cows producing 1330.5 milk and 43.78 fat.

M. L. Meyers of Boardman was added to the membership of the association and Joe Long of Umatilla was dropped.

ALFALFA NOW LEADS WEST OF CASCADES

In spite of some difficulty normally experienced in western Oregon in securing a stand of alfalfa, the acreage is forging ahead. From figures compiled by the Oregon State college extension service, grimm alfalfa is becoming most popular with Willamette valley farmers as a forage crop.

Grim alfalfa normally produces a ton more hay to the acre than the average of other hay crops in the Willamette valley, according to the figures. In 15 western Oregon counties, 57,085 acres of grimm alfalfa were grown in 1938 as compared to only 3,310 in 1926. Lane county leads with a production of 11,000 acres of alfalfa.

FIRST INSURANCE ON WHEAT LOSSES PAID IN OREGON

Ernest Christopherson of Ione in Morrow county and George L. Barnett of Kent in Sherman county are the two first Oregon wheat growers to have their applications for crop insurance payments approved by the state office, announces Clyde Kiddle, supervisor of the federal crop insurance program in Oregon under the AAA.

Christopherson had 953 acres insured under four policies. He is asking indemnities on two of them involving 512 acres which will yield below normal.

"This is the first crop failure in my history of farming," said Christopherson in regard to his application. "I have farmed the present land since 1916. It surely is lucky for me that I took out insurance this year." The crop insurance corporation will doubtless pay Christopherson in cash rather than in wheat, according to Kiddle.

George Barnett had a policy covering 171 acres of winter wheat with a guaranteed production of 1552 bushels. Drouth and frosts, however, reduced his yield to only about 427 bushels. As a result, he will receive 1125 bushels from stored wheat held by the insurance corporation. His premium amounted to 248 bushels.

Oregon wheat growers have 708 policies in effect this year out of a total of 834 insurance applications filed. It is too early to predict the extent of losses to be paid, says Kiddle, but preliminary reports coming in from Gilliam, Jefferson, Morrow and Sherman counties, particularly, indicate that growers will collect indemnity payments amounting to somewhere under 100,000 bushels, perhaps no more than 70,000.

The Corvallis AAA office has just been notified that details of the 1940 crop insurance program have been approved and that these provide for a somewhat simplified and improved plan for the coming year. More of the work of issuing policies will be done in the counties and hereafter the insurance will be written at the same time the application is filed.

EASTERN OREGON 4-H FIELD TRIP TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK

The annual Eastern Oregon field trip for 4-H club boys will take place Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the coming week. The tour will start at the Union experiment station where a complete examination will be made of the field crops and livestock experiments now taking place on the station and it is planned to spend the first night camping in the station grove.

The following day the tour will take in several stock ranches of interest in Baker county and will camp the second night at the fair grounds at Halfway. On the final day besides visiting some farms in the Pine Valley district, it is planned to tour the Cornucopia gold mines in Baker county.

On this trip the boys are taking their own bedding and camping equipment and will prepare all of their own meals. Boys from the west end of Umatilla county planning to attend are Clayton Buell, Tommy Todd, Bobby Eaton and Henry Sommerer Jr. Harry F. Cline, assistant county agent at Milton, will be in charge of the Umatilla county aggregation.

TODAY'S EMPLOYER LOOKS FOR CLEAN BILL OF HEALTH

During these summer months many a young graduate will start out looking for his or her first job. A personnel director or employer is quick to appraise an applicant by his appearance, before ever getting down to his special fitness for any particular work. How many of these young people, as they approach prospective employers will pass this appearance test—good posture; clear, fresh complexion; sparkling eyes, good teeth; a well-nourished body, but not overweight?

Employers are looking for a worker that will be alert and keen in a busy, crowded office. The habits that disregard "body needs" may prevent a young person from building the health which should be a part of youth, and the lack of which may keep him from succeeding to the extent of his capabilities.

A wise mother will help to establish good food habits early in childhood and will continue to encourage young people of high school and college to drink milk, eat plenty of fruits and vegetables, and include whole-grain bread and cereals in their daily meals. Such food habits, together with plenty of fresh air and sunshine and long hours of sleep will give boys and girls that look of keenness, freshness, cleanliness, and good health that should complement his or her special training for a job.

Perhaps not enough young people appreciate the importance of good nutrition in improving appearance. Some girls, in their effort to remain slim deprive themselves of food necessary to protect health. The days when it was considered smart to be "just naturally thin" are a thing of the past—and the match-stick figures of a few years ago are definitely out. Going without breakfast, or limiting it to toast and black coffee with perhaps other meals of similar nature, produces malnourished tissues and fatigue which makes good posture impossible, may cause teeth to decay, and gives a tired, sallow look to the face.

Young people naturally do not put the same evaluation upon health that adults do. But don't let this indifference worry you—just check it off to lack of experience.

But if you have started early enough in your campaign for good habits of eating you may be sure that the young graduate will have the qualities of health and appearance which are even more important in holding than in getting a job.

Freshman Week Broadcast Billed
Oregon State College—What the prospective Oregon State college student may expect to find on the campus during Freshman week next fall will be discussed over radio KOAC Saturday evening, July 15, starting at 9:00 o'clock. The discussion will be one of the series of college round table programs, in which E. B. Lemon, chairman, Dean U. G. Dubach, and several other members of the Freshman week committee will take part. Oregon State was one of the pioneers in developing Freshman week as an aid to incoming students.
