ELECTRICAL JARGON MADE PLAIN FOR ORDINARY USE

Volts, amperes, watts, kilowatt hours, and similar words which are in the habit of having mixed meanings for most people not versed in electrical terms, are explained in everyday language in a new extension circular No. 330, issued at Oregon state college.

This circular is designed for use by 4-H club members enrolled in rural electrification projects, but so much material of general use is contained in the circular that it will be supplied free to Oregon citizens interested, says Everett H. Davis, extension specialist in agricultural engineering, who is the author.

In addition to explaining electrical terms, the circular explains simple wiring layouts around a farmstead, describes the best kind of materials to use, and discusses adequate lighting for various parts of the residence and other farm buildings. A list of lighting outlets, switches and convenience plugs recommended for various buildings on the farm is also included.

NEW ZEALANDER WISECRACKS ON DAIRY INDUSTRY

In an "essay" on the history of the cow, J. Kellher, a New Zealand wit, got this off, in part, which is applicable in America in certain respects, which you will be able to recognize without our help:

"The most important part of the cow, however, is the receptacle in which the milk is prepared and stored. This is called the udder. By a clever arrangement this is divided into four compartments, each with a separate tap. By this means the milk is divided at its source, so that one part goes to the landlord, one to the mortgagee, one to the Government, and one to the farmer. Sometimes one of the compartments will be defective, and in such cases the farmer is omitted.

"The cow is a very simple animal. Her principal pleasure is that of getting in front of motor cars. For this reason many kind-hearted farmers turn their herd on to the road towards dusk on Sunday evening, as the city motor traffic is returning homewards, so that as many of their cows as possible may join in this simple amusement.

"In recent years there has been a very commendable movement to improve the general standard of cows in New Zealand. The method adopted is simple, but very effective. Once a year every farmer selects the worst of his cows and sells them to other farmers. These are called 'culls' except when you do this for yourself, in which case they are known as specially selected pedigree stock.

"There are two classes of cows—those that pay and those that don't." —The Jersey Bulletin.
