Boys Will Be Boys, Goethe Liked Puppets

The German poet, Goethe, was a friend of puppets from his childhood. When he was about the age of seven, a friend of his good mother made some puppets and sent them to him and his sister for a Christmas present.

The mother had a happy thought. She made a little stage and set it in the doorway of a room, just off the living room. On Christmas morning, so the story is told by Winifred H. Mills and Louise M. Dunn in "Marionettes," after the children had seen their presents, she had the family sit down before the closed door. When she opened it, there was a kind of porch concealed with a mysterious curtain.

The children were curious and eager to know what was behind that half-transparent veil. The mother, however, bade each sit down upon his stool. At length, Goethe says, "all were silent, a whistle gave the signal, the curtain rolled aloft and showed us the interior of a temple painted in deep red colors.

The high priest, Samuel, appeared with Jonathan, and their strange alternating voices seemed to me the most striking thing on earth. Shortly after entered Saul, overwhelmed with confusion at the impatience of that heavy-limbed warrior who had defied him and all his people. But how glad I was when the dapper son of Jesse, with his crook and shepherd's pouch and sling, came hopping forth and said, "Dread king and sovereign lord, let no one's heart sink down because of this. If your majesty will grant me leave, I will go out to battle with this blustering giant!"

Boys Who Hit Sour Notes Should Avoid the Jungle

Music in the African jungle is a serious business, says Dr. Wilfrid D. Hambly, curator of African ethnology at Chicago's Field Museum of Natural History.

Certain dark races have punishments that fit the crime of blowing sour notes or dropping a beat. The proper technique on the native drums or other musical instruments is no hit-or-miss affair. The boys who make "moosick" better strike the right note first or else—those that don't get their ears cut off, their mouths slit and the offending hands chopped right off.

Any American jazz band planning an African tour better leave at home that saxophonist who wails off key, or drummer who "fakes sloppy" on the traps.

Where hitting a false note or dropping a beat is such serious business the boys who made good occupy a high social position. But their job isn't any entertaining the other boys and girls. The jungle drummers send messages to other tribes from 5 to 15 miles away—as the sound flies. If any mistakes are made, there's no second chance.

Any traveling swing band that could bring home a certain kind of African drum would certainly be a hit. A wooden rod sticks up through the drum head. The player just rubs this protuberance with a well-resined hand, to bring forth walls and groans ear-splitting enough to please the most confirmed "jitterbug."

Roosevelt's Time Clock

Near the front door in the residence part of the White House hangs a board with pegs in it, to check in and out all members of the household. It is described by Drew Pearson and Robert Allen as similar to the board used on ships in the navy, and is the latest navy touch in the household of the man whose friends call him "skipper." The board has two columns of cards, 24 in all, each card bearing a name. Opposite each name is a peg, which is plugged into the "out" hole or the "in" hole, as the person leaves or arrives.

One feature about the board is that nowhere does it carry the name of the President or Mrs. Roosevelt. Yet there is a card for each—a blank card. Every time the President leaves the house, a peg is moved opposite a certain blank card, known only to aides. The same for Mrs. Roosevelt.

Only if all the rooms are occupied, which does not often happen, are all 24 cards "active." In the case of Mrs. Roosevelt, the peg stands "out" more often than "in."

Grand-daddy of Stamps

During the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the postage stamp, collectors heard much talk about his father, Sir Rowland Hill, but little about his grandfather, Jacob Perkins.

Without him, the penny postage stamp would not have been possible to produce economically. Probably about 1810, Perkins discovered that steel could be softened and hardened. Being a steel engraver and a printer of currency for the Massachusetts government, it occurred to him that one steel engraving could be transferred to a steel plate in any number desired. He went to England in 1818 to compete for a currency printing contract and when the Penny Black was conceived, his firm of Perkins, Bacon and Petch was ready with the machinery to bring it into the world. Perkins was born at Newburyport, Mass., July 19, 1766, and died in London July 30, 1849.
