● We buy our oranges, lemons and grapefruit graded in uniform size and quality according to the Federal Government grader for citrus fruits. We find it more convenient to sell them by the dozen, and we believe that because the customer is accustomed to buying them that way he is better able to judge price and value when they are so priced. We do not feel that pricing citrus fruits by the pound is either logical or advantageous.

WOOLLEY TELLS OF R. E. A. FUNCTIONS

R. L. Woolley of the Hermiston R. E. A. office gave an interesting discussion of the functions of the REA and of the uses of electricity on the farm, at the last regular meeting of the Westland Grange. Mr. Woolley's discussion was a feature of a program arranged by the co-op. committee headed by Guy Shaw. It was announced that one of the other standing committees of the Grange would assist in the program at the next regular meeting.

Following the business session, refreshments were served by Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Seeliger.

GARDEN CLUB CHATS

by Mrs. Vera Doyle
Pruning for the already established bedding rose begins as soon as the covering is removed in the spring. Cut out diseased and dead wood first, also crossing branches. Then prune with two ideas in mind. Do you want specimen roses or a large number of blooms? For the former cut the canes to four or five eyes. For the later only one-third to one-half the length of the shoots should be cut away. When over-pruned the tendency of the plants is to grow rather than to bloom.

Prune Ramblers immediately after flowering. Where the roses are trained over a trellis so high that one season's growth will not cover it, some of the old shoots should be cut off at the ground, and the new shoots in an equal number should be permitted to replace them. The old canes should be shortened to where the new side shoots are starting at a proper height to recover the support. Ramblers produce best flowers on wood only one year old.

Climbing hybrid teas and hybrid perpetuals should be left unpruned, but old, worn out or diseased stems may be removed. Best flowers are grown on the old wood. Occasionally you may cut back severely. The grower must learn these points by experience and observation.

After the first year shrub roses may be pruned of dead, dying, or weak wood, branches that cross and branches with discolored pith. Do not cut the ends of branches. Cut back to the base of plant. These are the Rugosa, Cabbage rose, Moss rose, Brier roses and the Austrian Copper and many more too numerous to mention.

Tree roses are a bush rose grafted three feet or more above the ground on a strong-stemmed rose. They are appropriately used in connection with a formal design, in special gardens or near buildings.

Beginning as soon as the foliage begins to unfold, precautions should be taken against the diseases which beset rose foliage. This will be done often during the growing season to keep the plants clean, healthy and vigorous.

The next meeting of the Hermiston Garden club will be held Friday, February 28.
