ing the crop, say weed research men at Oregon State college. Publication of the experimental results obtained with a combination of a dyestuff, sodium-dinitro-ortho-cresylate, and common ammonium sulfate has brought a flood of inquiries to the college for further information.

The yellow dye is manufactured by only one company and is sold under the common name of sinox. It is being distributed in Oregon and can be obtained through many feed and seed stores. A bulletin on its use is in process of publication, and meanwhile additional information may be obtained from county agents or direct from the farm crops department at the college.
