

How to Get the Best Service From an Electric Milk Cooler

Bacterial growth in electrically-cooled milk is reduced to a minimum.

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

MOST farmers know that a modern electric cooler provides the ideal means of preserving the quality of milk. Not only is it infinitely more convenient than ice but also it automatically maintains a uniformly low temperature within narrow limits, is quicker, more economical and requires a minimum of labor and attention.

However, there doubtless are many present and future users of electric milk coolers who, for one reason or another, may not get the maximum benefits from their equipment. Thus, many milk cooler compressor units are installed with no provision for air exchange or direct outside ventilation. Wherever possible, it is desirable to place the compressor unit in a separate room—preferably against an outside wall. Even better, a louvered opening through the wall at a point nearest the compressor cooling coils and fan permits the free circulation of the relatively cooler outside air over the coils. When the compressor cooling unit is so located, the more rapid is the heat exchange between it and the surrounding air, the less time the compressor must operate and the lower its running cost.

Placing the insulated milk cooling tank so that it is out of range of direct sunlight from the windows and away from the sun-heated outer walls still further reduces operating costs. Setting the tank into the floor so that the rim is from 12 to 18 inches above increase of dairy production in Oregon over 1940 is about 10 per cent, the 40 increase in price of butterfat. It also reported about a 20 per cent increase in condensed milk for the last six months of 1941 due to condensation from butter plants.

It pointed out that the areas in Oregon now equipped for manufacture of the three principal dairy commodities are limited in extent and that there is little opportunity for increase in production of these through manufacture.

ONE MORE TWIN CALVES REPORTED

The Columbia district is getting to be quite a community for twin births. Every so often some farmer reports twin calves, colts or other animals. The latest on the list but not for the first time is Jess Myrick, who reports the birth of twin calves.

The Herald will be pleased to run a "Twin Column" if and when the occasion demands.

DAIRY COMMITTEE TALKS PRODUCTION FOR LEASE

Any increase in production of milk is desired to provide an increased volume of cream, evaporated and powdered milk under the lease-lease program which is being discussed through an extension of the feeding period through the late summer and winter months, especially along the coast where pasturage is the normal basis of production. This is the conclusion voiced in a resolution adopted by the dairy advisory committee of the state department of agriculture at a recent meeting.

Continued upon a satisfactory price for these commodities for a definite period, producers can definitely plan a feeding program which should result in increasing production along the coast from 10 to 15 per cent during the winter of 1941-42.

The committee feels that normal production of dairy products should be maintained at the same time as the demand as long as necessary to meet the demands of the war program for export of principal dairy products.

The dairy advisory committee will represent Oregon on the National United Dairy Association, and named A. W. Taylor, chief of the dairy division of the state department of agriculture and Prof. P. N. Brandt of Oregon State college to represent it at the next meeting of the national committee.

The committee reported that the
