THE ARMY NEEDS THOUSANDS OF MILES OF COPPER WIRE

....another reason why we can't build long power lines to serve non-defense activities!

Directing artillery fire and keeping the general in touch with all parts of his army requires a lot of copper wire. In the last war our signal corps strung enough wire to stretch around the world several times!

The Navy, too, uses copper—over 200,000 pounds in a single battleship. And the manufacture of ammunition, for both our Army and Navy, takes more than 25% of the output of American copper mines.

The gigantic demands of modern war have created a copper shortage. Civilian use has been cut drastically. No longer can power companies build long rural and suburban extensions such as have already brought low-cost electricity to nearly every farm in this area. Nor can we make extensive installations to serve stores or industries without approval of the Office of Production Management.

It will be a real, though temporary, inconvenience for this growing area not to have Pacific Power & Light's cheap electricity so easily available for new farm and suburban homes. However, until the Japs and Nazis have been thoroughly defeated and our homes and families made safe from aggression, we are sure every American wants the Army and Navy to have all the copper they need.

When the war is won, P.P.&L. will again continue its program of extending arteries of copper to deliver to more people the cheap electricity you and your neighbors use so generously for better living.

Please see us first if you plan to build a new home or make any changes in your electric requirements. Your problems will be given every consideration possible.
