STORAGE OF WHEAT WORRIES LOCAL GROWERS

Oregon's acute grain storage situation, as revealed at the special meeting of northwest grainmen in Portland last week, was called to the attention of Umatilla county wheat growers in a statement released yesterday by the county AAA office.

Unless emergency measures are taken within the next 60 days, at least half of Oregon's estimated 17 million bushel 1942 wheat crop—and it may be even larger—will have no place to go at harvest time.

Whether or not a good portion of the crop will have to be piled on the ground depends largely on the amount of storage space farmers themselves can provide. Commercial warehouses and elevators are filled 75 per cent of capacity with last year's crop. Most of the 18 million bushel carryover, plus three million more bushels in farm storage will still be here when the new crop is harvested.

Commodity Credit will not be able to make much of a dent in the pile, despite programs to release wheat for conversion into alcohol, feeding to livestock and grinding into flour for lend-lease shipment.

The supply of new sacks will be extremely limited. Burlap imports—all from India—have been stopped by the war. Present supplies will have to last for the duration, and the Army has first call on burlap for sandbags and camouflage.

Shortage of metals makes construction of new warehouse and elevator space extremely difficult. However, War Production Board representatives have given assurance that nails, lumber and limited amounts of other materials needed for construction of small, non-fireproof farm storage facilities will be available.

The county AAA office asks each grower to find out at once whether or not their local warehouse will be able to handle his crop. If the warehouse will not have facilities available, growers should plan now to provide storage for their own grains.

A. R. Coppock, chairman of the county AAA committee, asks to give consideration to the acute storage situation when they vote at the May 2 referendum on wheat marketing quotas. Oregon's condition is not unique, he points out—present U. S. wheat supplies are sufficient to make 588 loaves of bread for every man, woman and child in the nation.

SIMPLE PROCESS MAKES FABRICS FIRE RESISTANT

Use of modern processes for rendering children's clothing, curtains, and some other fabrics flame-proof is one means of reducing farm fire hazards and possibly saving children from serious injury or death, says Lucy R. Lane, extension specialist in clothing and textiles at Oregon State college. Hearth rugs may also be protected in this way.

Flame-proofing treatments for use in the home are easy to apply, require little equipment and call for materials that are readily obtained. Fortunately, the best treatments are the simplest. A mixture of 30 per cent boric acid and 70 per cent borax belongs to this group. That is, for every two quarts of hot water add three ounces of boric acid and seven ounces of borax.

The flame-proofing process consists in dissolving the proper quantity of the flame-proofing substance in a specified amount of water and saturating the goods with the solution. Some articles can be treated by being dipped into the solution, squeezed through a clothes wringer or by hand and hung up to dry as clothes are customarily dried.

If it is not desirable to dip the articles into the fire-proofing solution, it can be hung up and sprayed with a common garden spray.

It is not advisable, says Miss Lane, to treat fabrics already wet, as the moisture already present prevents the absorption of enough of the fire-proofing solution to insure resistance to fire.

"Fire-Proofing Fabrics", Farmers Bulletin 1786, gives further information on this process. It can be obtained through county extension offices.

A commercial chemical for this same purpose is a newcomer in the markets. One plant alone is manufacturing it by the tons for civilian defense purposes.
