

Chickens—Ready for the Pan

Paul Maxwell, Safeway Meat Market in Portland, proudly displays a flock of the cleaned and drawn Pan-Ready chickens now being offered Safeway customers. Selling pre-dressed poultry is a new Safeway service just recently introduced. The chickens are dressed in a central eviscerating plant right after being killed, and rushed to the markets daily. Besides saving time and work for both customers and the market men, consumers can be assured that the cleaning and drawing has been done expertly, that flavor is always tops, all possible danger of any off-flavor contamination having been removed with the waste. Prices are quoted by the pound and are all based on actual net weights. Legs, head and entrails are not paid for as is the custom when buying undressed (known as New York dressed) poultry. In many instances, Safeway Pan-Ready (pre-dressed) chickens, though naturally selling at a higher per pound price, when compared on an equivalent basis with "New York Dressed" actually cost less. Safeway believes selling poultry the Pan-Ready way is an all-around improvement over prevailing methods and one which benefits the consumer in every way. All Safeway markets are featuring them this week.—Safeway Stores.

HAIRY VETCH IS RECOMMENDED AS PROFITABLE

Reports from a few farmers who have grown hairy vetch for at least the last two years indicate that this is a very profitable crop for this project. This year Lewis Fales in the North Hill district reported growing about eight acres of hairy vetch which he pastured three times and then harvested approximately $40 per acre of seed from it. This crop that he pastured and harvested was planted in the fall of 1940 and, therefore, he did not have the expense of planting the crop this year. He also pastured the crop in 1941 and harvested 360 pounds of clean seed to the acre.

Information from the Office of Production Management indicated that nitrogen supplies for fertilizer purposes in 1943 may be limited to as little as 50 per cent of that available in 1941. The straw of hairy vetch when harvested for seed is an excellent nitrate fertilizer. According to a study made by A. S. King, Soils Specialist at O.S.C., the straw is worth over $7 per ton on a basis of its fertilizer content. His same study showed barnyard manure to be worth $2.30 per ton for its fertilizer value. In addition to the fertilizer value of the straw hairy vetch is a legume, and therefore fixes nitrogen in the soil that the plant takes from the air.

The principal value of hairy vetch at this time other than its soil building properties is as a cover crop seed which is extensively used in the South. The government, through the AAA program is guaranteeing a price of 10c per pound for all seed grown in Oregon for shipment to the Southern states. The Southern farmers are using this high nitrogen producing crop to substitute for the nitrate fertilizers that they now are unable to obtain.

Hairy vetch can be used on this project in a number of ways. It can be grown for a seed crop and the growth and straw plowed under for a soil builder. It can be seeded in poor stands of alfalfa and by so doing the hay yield from the first cutting will be increased from one to two tons per acre. It can be plowed under in the spring as a green manure crop when seeded the fall before, making an excellent seed bed for any cultivated crop. It can be used as pasture crop or a hay crop.

According to E. R. Jackman the vetch to do best should be seeded by October 10. If for a seed crop it should be seeded alone and not with a grain crop. Some farmers, according to Jackman, around Bend seed the crop in the spring, take off a tremendous hay crop, then irrigate and save the vetch for the next year when they harvest a seed crop. This is especially practiced on dairy farms.

Farmers who have grown hairy vetch here report that it does better on their poor soil spots than any other crop they have grown. If most of the seed can be saved, according to Jackman, farmers growing this crop should get yields of 800 to 1000 lbs. per acre at a minimum. A new bulletin by Lawrence Jenkins, O.S.C., Asst. Farm Crops Specialist, gives information on the correct manner of harvesting the seed crop. A new method of cutting the crop has been devised that works very satisfactorily.

TERTLETOWN NEWS

By Mrs. Marshall Ransdell

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Larsen and son Eugene motored to Pasco, Wn., Friday evening for a short visit with Mrs. Larsen's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Jacobsen, and her sister Mrs. Donald Welch who had just arrived from Reeder, North Dakota. Mr. Larsen returned the same evening but Mrs. Larsen and Eugene stayed over and returned late Saturday. Mrs. Welch left Wednesday for Spokane where she will join her mother-in-law, Mrs. Herb Welch, and they will return to Reeder together.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Baranowski and son Dickie spent Saturday in Pendleton shopping.

Much interest is being shown by Tertletown residents in the U.S.O. activities. New activities starting this week or in the near future was the meeting Wednesday afternoon for rolling bandages to be used in Tertletown in case of an emergency, registration is still open for the Nutrition Class, and it is hoped that every woman in Tertletown will participate in and benefit from this important course. Also there is a well worked out program for children of pre-school age each morning from 10 to 12. This is a grand time and place to leave the youngsters while you shop or attend to other business, or just do the family baking and cleaning. Also it is a fine time to do your knitting or catch up on your reading if you have to wait for the little tots. It is such a friendly place to go at any time.

Roy Rogers, caretaker at Tertletown, expressed his appreciation of the cooperation of the men who have responded to Major Alexander's request that all yards be freed of weeds to prevent danger from fire. A united effort has produced a very neat looking place, to say nothing of a few blisters and callouses.
