the war effort, and places all new publicly and privately financed construction under rigid control.

The War Production board recognizes that a limited amount of construction by farmers is necessary to maintain and increase production to meet agricultural goals and that certain off-farm facilities are also needed for the production, handling and processing of farm products.

A farmer planning to begin construction which needs authorization should consult his county United States department of agriculture war board.

All farm projects, including residential, agricultural, and off-farm construction, such as warehouses, processing plants, creameries, etc., will be considered first by the United States department of agriculture county war boards. Applications for projects recommended by these boards will be sent to state war boards and then to the department of agriculture.

The department will consider the recommendations and send to the War Production board for final approval those which are deemed essential.

So far as residential construction is concerned, farm dwellings are covered by the same regulations as other residential construction. If farm residential construction, during any 12-month period, costs less than $500 per farm, no authorization is necessary. Likewise no authorization is required for construction begun prior to April 9, 1942; for maintenance and repairs; or for reconstruction or restoration of farm residential construction damaged or destroyed after December 31, 1941, by fire, flood, tornado, earthquake, act of God or by public enemy.

Take Care of Your Milking Machine as Parts Are Hard to Get

The milking machine is essential to wartime agricultural production, and must be cared for properly because shortages of rubber and metal will not permit normal replacement.

The following rules for the care of rubber milking machine parts are suggested:

Use two separate sets of liners, alternating them each week. Rubber needs "rest."

Keep liners tight in teat-cup shells.

Keep milker rubber parts clean and free from all butterfat, which causes deterioration.

Rubber cuts easily when wet. Use care in assembly and disassembly of units.

Do not use chlorine solutions of a strength exceeding 250 parts per million, for excessively strong chlorine solutions will injure rubber.

If lye is used in the care of rubber parts, be sure that it does not remain in contact with the metal parts.

Battling Soil Erosion

Legume crops such as alfalfa, clover, soybeans and lespedeza are being used with increasing success as "heavy artillery" in fighting the battle of soil erosion. Legumes keep the topsoil in place, deposit nitrogen in soil and provide it with needed supplies of organic matter. To do their best work, legumes should be reinforced by intelligent soil management such as the use of fertilizers high in phosphorus and potash.

WAR LABORS LAG

LET'S Break Bottlenecks AT BUS STOPS

Lingering Luke lessens war production when he loafs at lunch. 30 fighting men and war workers each lost 5 minutes to Luke. On the average bus run of 20 stops, that's fifty vital hours wasted. Buses have been slowed down to save tires. They cannot make up wasted time. So promptness now is a patriotic duty.
