Along the Highways.

The sign boards are there to protect human life. The patrol comes and goes to save your life. The roads were built, broad and straight as possible to save the lives of the travelers. The state has passed laws to restrict and restrain motorists from suicidal practices. The courts enforce the laws as lessons to the comers on. The automobile and the paved highway have come into human use, and activities only in the last three decades, and if it were not for precautions enforced by state and county, hospitals and cemeteries would all have to be enlarged. Grief and blood and human wrecks would strew to ways of our progress with heart sickening effects.

And yet how many are there who stop to think? How many are there who duck a stop sign when the patrol car is not in sight? How many are there who break the 35 mile limit asked by our government during war emergency. How many take on too much liquor and then take hold of the steering wheel? How many are just merely reckless, a characteristic of many minds? How many try to evade the requirements of good laws and statewide precautions to save human life? How many beg and deny and falsify when taken by the arm of the law, and make sport of the laws and the police and the courts? Even good citizens, who keep the law themselves, extend sympathy to the lawbreaker, and join the quasi criminal procession.

They all help to kill and maim more people in the United States in one year than we lose on all our battle fronts. Just a little less speed, just a little thought at the wheel, just a little more loyalty to law and precaution and enforcement, designed for human use and safety, would make a far better traffic world.
