FREEZING PEAS SUGGESTED BY MYRTLE CARTER

Pea canning time is here, and the wise homemaker is now stretching her next winter's ration points by canning or freezing fresh peas for the coming year, suggests Myrtle Carter, home demonstration agent.

In selecting peas for freezing, be sure they are tender, freshly gathered and green throughout. Avoid selecting peas for freezing after a heavy rain, as they are inclined to have a greenish flavor. The Alaska pea is not satisfactory for freezing. The old rule of two hours from the garden to the jar is still a very good rule.

To shell the peas quickly, dip the pods in hot water and run through the wringer, stem ends first. To avoid crushing peas, roll should be loosened.

All vegetables must be blanched thoroughly to kill enzymatic action. If this is not done vegetable will have an off-flavor. Heat three gallons of water to boiling point, place approximately one quart of the shelled peas in a clean sugar sack or wire basket, immerse in the boiling water for one to two-and-one-half minutes, depending on the size and age of peas. Agitate peas constantly, but keep below surface of water at all times. Remove and cool in a large pan of running cold water for the same length of time as the blanching period. Drain and pack dry in glass, plain tin cans or heavily waxed locker cardboard cartons, obtainable from locker plants. Best flavor and longer keeping are obtained in airtight containers. Take immediately to locker plant and freeze at 0 degrees Fahrenheit, or lower. Use within one year when stored at that Fahrenheit temperature.
