FORMER GARAGE MAN NOW REPAIRS PARACHUTES

England—A parachute is a type of insurance, and Staff Sergeant Robert E. Swigart of Sharon, Okla., is one of the men who write the policies. Assigned to the parachute repair and rigging shop at this Ninth AAF P-47 Thunderbolt fighter base, he is part of a team that sees that the pilot's chutes are always in tip-top condition.

The building in which the men work is in marked contrast with the standard Nissen huts at the base. Large, with a high center section, it looks like a surrealistic barn. The center is built high so we can hang the chutes up to dry, reported Sgt. Swigart. When they are unpacked, they dry for 24 hours before we inspect and repack them.

The thorough care which the parachutes receive is typical of the treatment which the U. S. Air Forces give every piece of equipment that increases the safety of the pilots. "We inspect the chutes every 10 days, and repack them every 30 days," Sgt. Swigart said. "We go over the silk or nylon inch by inch, looking for minute tears and imperfections. The same goes for the line, the pack, and the harness."

An item that seemed incongruous in the shop was the rubber life dinghy which the men were inspecting. "We give these dinghies the same type of inspection that we give the chutes," said Sgt. Swigart. "We inspect them for holes, and patch any that we find. They are inspected and repacked every 30 days, along with the chutes. Then, if a pilot has to "ditch" his plane in the channel, he is sure that he has a small rubber boat that will float when he presses the release on the dinghy's gas chamber."

Sgt. Swigart is married. He met his wife, Anabel Swigart of Mobile, Ala., while he was stationed there. His mother, Mrs. Nettie Jones, lives at 401 E. 3rd street, Hutchison, Kans. She runs a restaurant in Hutchison. Sgt. Swigart graduated from the Sharon high school in 1938, where he played basketball for three years. Prior to entering the army, he was employed in a body shop in Hermiston, Oregon. Before that he did body and fender work for the Williams Auto Company in Sharon.

Enlisting December 23, 1941, Sgt. Swigart took his basic training at Fort Lewis, Wash. After assignments at Sheppard Field, Tex., and Brookley Field, Mobile, Ala., he joined his present unit at Key Field, Meridian, Miss. He learned parachute rigging while assigned to the Service Squadron.

Sgt. Swigart's post-war plans reflect the gnawing desire of every American soldier stationed overseas. He says, "The main thing I want to do is be a civilian again."
