Horace Greeley's Advice Is Still Good

"The greatest market this nation has ever known is going to be in the West. Asia must be reconstructed—yes, Asia, Australia, China and the Orient. They are our markets of the future—our great markets. Why bring from the East our commodities and fabricated materials that we can easily manufacture here in the West? Why not construct these things that will be wanted by these countries?"

These words were taken from a speech made by Senator Pat McCarran in a recent speech at San Francisco.

In congress a committee consisting of seven senators and seven members of the House of Representatives has been chosen from the group of senators and representatives from the eleven western states to make a study of how to bring industries to the West. Their argument will be based on the coming extension of Pacific ocean commerce, the development of cheap electric power on the Columbia, in California and on other western streams, and the opening of new irrigated lands. Our own resources in minerals and timber are immense, and our climatic conditions are unexcelled anywhere else in the United States.

We, who live along the banks of the Columbia and adjacent to great power opportunities and resources of all kinds, can easily vision the possibilities that lie at our door. Three fifths of the area of this country lies west of the Mississippi where only one fifth of the national population lives. There is room for thousands more and with the development of manufacturing industries and the oriental trade there will be vast employment that will provide markets for all our products.

Horace Greeley's advice to the young men to "Go West" is still as good advice as when he gave it during the early days rush for lands and mining fields. The end of the war will make great changes.

SAFE PRACTICES ON FARM URGED

The importance of safe practices on the farm and in the farm home will be stressed in Umatilla county and throughout the United States during National Farm Safety Week, July 23 to 29, according to County Agent Walter A. Holt.

W. A. Schoenfeld, dean and director of agriculture at Oregon State college, has been named state chairman for Oregon for National Farm Safety Week by M. H. Coe, director of the farm division of the National Safety Council, which, in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture and various farm organizations, is sponsoring the farm safety campaign.

The O. S. C. Extension service, state farm organizations and other safety and agricultural groups in the state are cooperating with the program in Oregon, Mr. Holt says.

The purpose of the program is to mobilize the educational resources of the country in order to make farm people conscious of their accident problems and interested in solving it. Farm safety is a continuous program and it is hoped that National Farm Safety Week will provide the "kick-off" for a constant recognition of farm hazards and thereby save thousands of accidents every year.

"Farm accidents cost the lives of 20,000 farm people last year," Mr. Holt said, and some 2,000,000 farmers, members of their families and hired help were injured. The money loss from farm accidents last year was estimated at one billion dollars. The National Safety Council estimates that the loss of time from farm accidents is equivalent to double the amount of labor necessary to produce the annual wheat crop of the entire United States.

STOCK-UP ON COAL NOW!

MR. WISE OWL SAYS: "Past experience has taught us that to stock up on coal and other fuel during the summer months is very good business. Especially during war times, when transportation and labor is so critical, does this hold true. Be wise, and place your fuel orders during the next several weeks and be prepared for next winter."
