RULES GIVEN FOR SLAUGHTERING

With heavy runs of cattle beginning to come to market, the War Food Administration points out that cattle slaughter regulations in no way restrict the number that may be killed. This fact is one that apparently has not been understood by many people. R. D. Taylor, State AAA chairman, says.

Farmers may slaughter and deliver meat from any cattle or other livestock owned by them without any license or permit and without making any report of such deliveries to the government. Commercial packers and persons who slaughter livestock exclusively for others on a fee basis must obtain slaughtering licenses from WFA and slaughterers of 50 or more head of cattle weekly or 300 or more livestock annually must turn in monthly reports to WFA.

Slaughterers who kill more than 51 head of cattle weekly that produce "Army Style" beef must set aside a percentage for government purchase which must be Federally inspected. Slaughterers must comply with OPA regulations regarding grading of meat and collection of ration points. "The regulations pertain to licensing, grading, set-aside for government purchase, and collection of ration points," Mr. Taylor points out, "but they do not restrict the number of cattle that may be slaughtered."

ORDNANCE HAS NEW INSTRUMENT

Army Ordnance is supplying our Invasion Air Forces in France and the China-Burma-India Theatre with a new emergency cable cutter.

Colonel A. S. Buyers, commanding Umatilla Ordnance Depot, explained today that gliders, towed by aircraft, can normally disengage the tow cable at the proper time for landing.

Occasionally, however, an emergency may arise which will require the aircraft to disengage itself from the glider in a hurry. For such emergency situations, Ordnance developed a fool-proof cable cutter which cuts the tow cable instantly by an explosive charge.

The explosive unit is located outside the plane and is exploded by means of an electrical detonator within the plane.

The cutter is for emergency use only and is employed only when it is necessary to detach the plane from the glider tow line in order to save personnel and equipment from destruction.

The Ordnance Department, Army Service Forces, received a letter of commendation from the Army Air Forces for the quick and efficient manner in which the development, manufacture and shipment of invasion explosive charge assemblies were accomplished.

This is an oil filter

You'd think that clean oil, inside a sealed engine, would keep fairly sanitary. But not so.

As it circulates, it picks up more assorted grime than a bunch of fifth grade kids playing commando.

So oil must be cleaned, or the scratchy stuff it picks up would be carried into close-fitting places where it would be about as beneficial as a cinder in your eye.

Like the kitchen strainer sketched above, the oil filter's job is to trap and hold unwanted lumps and things. And like a strainer, it eventually gets so clogged up that it can't function.

That's why Shell people occasionally urge you to buy a new oil filter cartridge . . . to keep your car from joining the parade of 5000 junkers that are scrapped every day. We don't want that to happen. We love you.
