The Office Gang

Set in a row all neat and fine
Nine little desks all in a line.

Captain McCoy to give us class
And set us apart from the common mass.

Next is Jean, with light brown hair
Boss's secretary, sweet and fair.

Then Mr. Morrison—poor sad man
Gets along with these femmes as best he can.

He's next to Joyce, that I'm saying to you,
She's manager—clever and tasty, too.

I sit next—midst youth and beauty,
Just an old bag doing her duty.

Bonnie is next—a decided brunette
She's breaking in with toil and sweat.

Then there is Dorothy with bills to fix,
She's back again—no appendix.

Then comes Janet—a war widow gay,
She helps our morale on a gloomy day.

Leila is next—she's blond as a lily
And handles her job the same way as Tillie.

The ninth desk is empty since men are few.

And it's occupant has work to do.
Across the room is lonely grandeur
Marion sits and takes a gander.
At all the antics large or small
That carry on across our hall.
I have it on authority
That we're the tops at U.O.D.
